line doubles team.

Sceery paired with freshman Prescott Busk at second doubles against Hanover in an exciting but very competitive loss, which ended in a third set tiebreaker. Busk, who was filling in for another team member, did so admirably and would make a terrific rookie addition to the squad.

After seeing Sceery in match play, he appears ready to move up to first doubles, and possibly assume some singles roles when it is necessary for the team.

Anton completed an outstanding rookie campaign as a sophomore, being thrust immediately into the second singles position. However, a great athlete and an even better gamer, Anton was tops on the team in 2002, with 12 dual meet wins. The second singles spot remains questionable this year, as Anton may prove to be more valuable to the team by pairing up with Faber at first doubles, and shifting Sceery to second singles.

At second doubles, junior Andrew Wise will likely be playing with newcomer freshman Chris Pescatore, a late addition to the pre-season roster. Wise gained some valuable match-time experience last year, including key doubles wins over Harwich, Abington and Mashpee late in the season to solidify Cohasset's place in the tourney. Pescatore has been swinging very well in recent practices, and the duo should be more than capable of holding off all challengers.

Wise teamed with Faber at first doubles in Hanover, and were overwhelmed 6-0, 6-2. But things always seem to improve when the normal pre-season roster juggling stops and the line-up becomes more sure.

Eye on the prize

This year, she will team up with co-captain Julie Shea, also a senior. Shea was an easy choice for the All-Star team last year with her partner Kate Englander at first doubles (it goes without saying that Grossman and Stone were just as easy of choices for the All-Star selection committee to make.)

Englander, now a sophomore, will be sorely missed by the team after transferring schools at the start of this school year. However, the underclassman talent that has come up this year should be very capable of filling in any holes in the line-up.

The junior trio of Courtney Caron, Emilie Sullivan, and Holly Graham all possess the skills to win at second singles, third singles or as one half of a doubles team. Caron teamed with last year's senior captain for an outstanding doubles season, while Graham and Sullivan were key players in the late season playoff run.

Freshmen Chelsea Grossman, Lindsay's younger sister, and Amelia Shea, Julie's younger, have both looked excellent in pre-season practices. Depending upon how the line-up falls, these two might very well end up paired together for second doubles. However, with a program as loaded with talent as this one is, including so many versatile and talented players, the line-up can always shift.

The Lady Skippers open their season this Thursday at home against non-league opponent Scituate, hoping to better the top contenders in the SSL for a repeat of their league crown. The SSL opener on Monday pits the Cohasset girls against their co-champion Norwell squad on the road.

Design at T-shirt for the Duck Derby

In celebration of the first Driftway Duck Derby, the Scituate Committee of the soon-to-open Our World Children's Museum in Cohasset is sponsoring an art contest for South Shore elementary schoolchildren. The contest's theme is ducks. Artwork can be in any medium, up to three colors (black is a color), and on 8-1/2 x 11 in. white paper.

The winning artwork will be appear on Duck Derby T-shirts that will be available for sale at the derby on Sunday, May 4 from 3 to 5 p.m. at the Driftway Park in Scituate. The derby, which will benefit the Our World Children's Museum, is open to young and old alike!

To enter the derby, simply purchase $5 tickets at Buttonwood Books at the Shaw's Plaza in Cohasset, or Young At Heart Toy Store, Front Street, Scituate beginning April 4. Tickets may also be purchased at the Driftway Park on the day of the event beginning at 2 p.m. Each ticket represents a special toy duck that will be entered in the Derby. The toy ducks will be released near James Landing in Scituate at 3 p.m. The finish line will be at the Driftway Park. The owners of winning ducks will receive a variety of fun prizes including toys and gift certificates. In addition to the duck derby, there will be games, activities, and food for families to enjoy.

Artwork for the T-shirt design contest should be submitted to Pam Golden, Montessori Community School, 46 Watch Hill Drive, Scituate, MA 02066. The deadline for entries is 3 p.m., April 14. Please include the name of the child entering the contest, his or her age, the name of a parent, and a telephone number on the back of the entry. The winner will be notified on April 15.

The Our World Children's Museum is devoted to creating opportunities for children throughout the South Shore to gain global awareness through play spaces, rotating exhibits, and programming. It will be a place where children can journey across land and sea, transcend time and place, and celebrate the rich and vibrant traditions that shape our world.

The Museum, which is scheduled to open in late 2003/early 2004, will be housed in the 1929 wing of the old Osgood School, 100 Sohier St., Cohasset.

Sandcastles enrollment

Sandcastles ChildCare, Preschool & Private Kindergarten, serving children 8 weeks to 6 years announces open enrollment for our Infant, Pre-toddler, Toddler, Preschool, Pre-K and Private Kindergarten programs for ages 8 weeks to 6 years. Sandcastles offers excellent teacher pupil ratios with constructive activities to help children acquire new skills, broaden their interests and improve their abilities. Programs involve fun and learning through a combination of educational programs and activities such as swimming lessons, field trips, beach trips, museum trips, Music Circus trips and weekly visits from the Music Lady.

For additional information or to arrange a visit call Owner/Director Anne Sexton at 781-383-6789 or 781-383-9987.

Seaside Adventures

Seaside Adventures, a new program, will be offered at the Center for Student Coastal Research, starting July 1, and runs for three 2-week sessions through August 7. The program's motto, "inspire excitement" reflects the program's purpose of educating current fourth-through-sixth graders on the topics of oceanography, geology, beach composition, and local habitat preservation and appreciation. All sessions, available in the morning or afternoon, incorporate hands-on learning and may involve excursions to such places as Cohasset Harbor, Sandy Beach and Lily Pond. Each session will meet Tuesday through Thursday, 2-1/2 hours daily, for 2 weeks.

The three sessions each focus on a different theme. In the first session, "Beachcombers," young geologists will explore local beach compositions and tides, and will participate in interesting activities along the shoreline. Session II, "Under the Sea," includes building and examining aquariums, and exploring ocean dwellers ranging from creepy crawlers to fascinating fish. The third session of the summer, titled "Explorers," involves exciting activities caring for the special critters that dwell in our ocean and fresh water ponds.

For more information on the Center for Student Coastal Research's Seaside Adventures please visit its web site, www.cescr.org, or call our office at (781)-383-8909. Applications are available online, at the Paul Pratt Library, or at the Recreation Department, and can be mailed to 40 Parker Avenue any time before May 1. If you'd like more information on Seaside Adventures, the Center for Student Coastal Research is hosting an Open House at the newly remodeled Hagerty Building, 40 Parker Ave., Saturday April 12, 9am-2pm.

School program sheds light on bullying issue

On Wednesday April 9, three new students will spend the morning at the Deer Hill School with sixth graders, and their parents, to explore the cruel effects and consequences of bullying and other harassment issues. Malcolm, P.J., and Natalie are not typical sixth graders, however, they are members of an educational theatre troupe presenting "Doin' the Right Thing!" "Doin' the Right Thing" will be presented on Wednesday, April 9 at 9 a.m. in the Deer Hill School gymnasium. For more information on the program, contact Deer Hill Adjustment Counselor Betsy McGrath at 781-383-6115.

The program was developed and produced by Deana's Fund, an organization dedicated to preventing violence. It is being brought to Cohasset by the Project Safeguard committee, an independent community organization which receives funding and support from the PSO and town churches.

"Doin' the Right Thing" emphasizes the important role students have in identifying, understanding and ending the cruel effects of bullying. The program will include enactment of bullying stories, harmful behaviors, its consequences, as well as how to defend yourself and others. P.J., the victim, Malcolm, the school bully and Natalie, who is trying to become part of the popular crowd, explore the actions and feelings of harassment. Students will witness verbal, non-verbal and physical behavior that may reflect real-life bullying in their school and community. They will also see positive role modeling as one of the actors decides to take a stand.

Following the play students, and parents, will break into separate groups to discuss what they witnessed, assess their own behavior and how to seek help in preventing action that can harm others. "Parents' interest and involvement in this serious and prevalent topic will help their child understand that we all play a role in making our school a safe and respectful place. This unique program is a valuable opportunity for us to reinforce our school policy against harassment and bullying," says McGrath.

Both the Project Safeguard committee and the PSO are volunteer groups that meet on a regular monthly basis and are continually open to participation from interested individuals.

Bullying and Harassment Fact Sheet

- As many as 15 percent of students in United States schools report being severely traumatized by peer abuse (The Bully Prevention Handbook, 1996)
- A child who is identified as a bully by age eight is six times more likely to be convicted of a crime by age 24 and five times more likely to end up with a criminal record by age 30 (Olweus, 1987; Eron 1987)
- About 22 percent of students in grades 4-8 reported academic difficulties as a result of peer abuse. (The Bully Prevention Handbook, 1996)
- Bullying directly affects about five million elementary and junior high students in the United States. (National Association of School Psychologists, 1992)
- A recent report on fatal school shootings found that more than two-thirds of the attackers said they were "bullied, persecuted, threatened, attacked or injured" by other prior to the incident. Bullying appeared to be a major reason for attacks by those who reported that they were victims of longstanding, severe bullying and harassment. (US Secret Service National Threat Assessment Center, 2000)
- Among boys and girls verbal abuse is the most common form of bullying. Social ostracism and exclusion were the second most common among girls; while boys resort more to direct bullying like physical abuse, threats or taking money or property. (Mullin-Rindler, Wellesley College Center for Research on Women, 1998)
- One study found that targets of bullies centered on three groups: 1) Girls who were not seen as physically attractive; 2) Boys who were viewed as artsy, not into athletics, or not meeting macho standards; and 3) Girls who developed early and who were seen as physically attractive. (Shakeshaft, 1995)

LIBRARY CLOSING

Last Friday the Town of Cohasset closed on the sale of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library building to the Cohasset Historical Society. Handing over the former library keys to Kathy O'Malley, far left, and Paula Kozol, co-presidents of the historical society, are library trustees Patience Towle and Barbara Power (second from right and far right). The society paid $739,000 for the 100-year-old building.

LIBRARY CORNER

New displays

Look for the new display case as you enter the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library. It is located to the left of the entry into the Children's Room.

This month it features miniature Early American wooden furniture created by Cohasset resident, Mr. Carlo Conte. Mr. Conte arrived in America via Ellis Island in 1920. He repaired and refinished furniture for many years then began making miniature furniture.

If you have a special collection that you are interested in displaying, please contact Barbara Power through the library at 781-383-1348.

Also on display this month is a love orchid graciously loaned to the library by another Cohasset resident, Dr. Edward Woods. It is situated by the windows in the reference area and is a true harbinger of spring.

Video Donations

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is looking for video donations from the community to enhance their growing collection. Tasteful adult and children's videos are now being accepted by the staff at the front desk.

If your are spring cleaning or just getting prepared for a summer garage sale, think of the library as a place to drop off any videos that you may no longer want.

Bracale is Artist of the Month

Joan Bracale, a Hingham resident and gallery artist at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset has created an incredible display of oil paintings titled, "Winter Break." The artist notes that, "Many of the paintings for 'Winter 'Break were developed in my studio this past January and February, working from painted studies, thumbnail sketches and my own photographs taken on location," she said.

Educated at Mount Holyoke and NYU's Tisch School of the Arts, Bracale now studies oil painting with John Kilroy, Chris Sovek and Lois Griffel. Over the past 10 years, she has had numerous shows throughout the South Shore and has received many awards for her work.

In her Artist's Statement, Bracale continues: "Paintings took on a life of their own as I explored color harmonies and manipulated composition. A transient moment caught outdoors in a sketch or a photograph became extended and altered in the process of painting."

If you have not had the opportunity to see Joan Bracale's show, take the time to visit the new Community Room area and browse through the artwork that is familiar with locales such as, Worlds End and Hingham. It's definitely worth the trip.

The show continues until April 30. Call the Paul Pratt Memorial Library at 781-383-1348.

'The Sound of Music'

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library will host the Cohasset Dramatic Club on Tuesday, April 15 at 4:30 p.m. in the Meeting Room. It is a great opportunity to see and hear children from the area perform selections from their upcoming performance, "The Sound of Music." This event will last about one hour. At the conclusion of the performance, light refreshments will be served courtesy of the Friends of the Library in the Community Room.

Storytime

A spring drop-in storytime will take place in the Story Room at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Tuesdays from 1-1:30 p.m. and on Thursdays from 10:30-11 a.m., beginning April 15 and ending May 22.

All ages are invited and no registration is required.

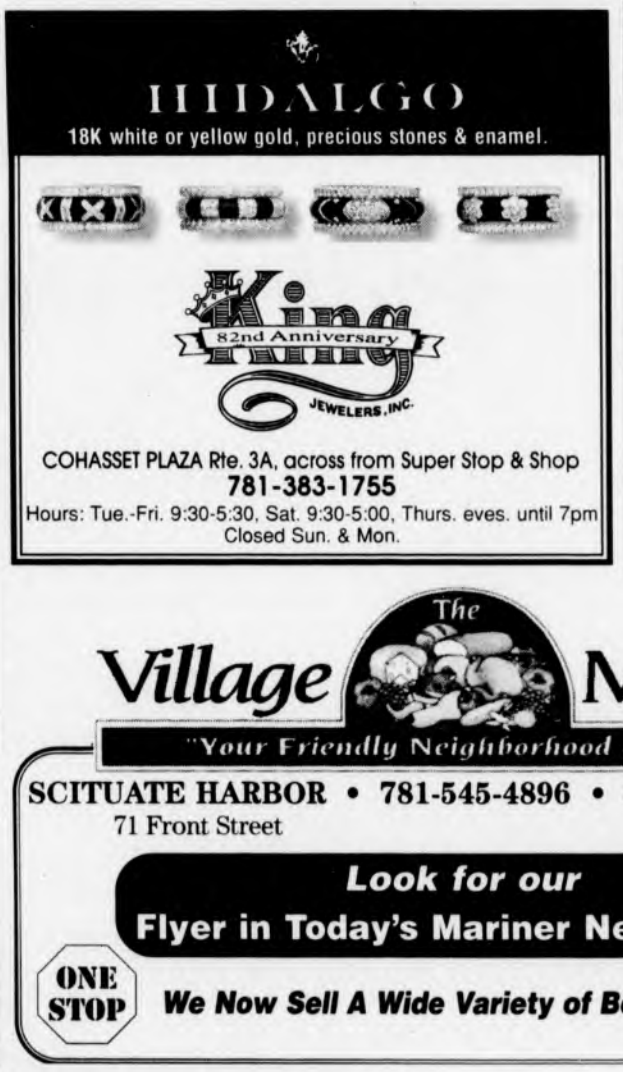
The overall winner was Christian Brady. The Cub Scouts will be competing in the Cranberry Harbor District Pinewood Derby Race held on April 5, at St. Mary's Church Hall in Hanover.



Cohasset library director closes local chapter

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

"Cohasset was the most fun of all because of the support of the wonderful community and wonderful trustees."
— Janet Husband

Retirement is the wrong word when describing the new chapter in Janet Husband's life. Although she has officially "retired" from her duties as library director at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library – she won't want for things to keep her busy.

For one thing, she serves as a library trustee, which is an elected post, in her hometown of Braintree. She and her husband are also working on the fourth edition of Sequels, a guide to novels and series published by the American Library Association. Sequels is useful for those who enjoy mysteries, for example, so they can find out what to what to read next in a particular series.

But even with a lot to look forward to, Husband was a little sad last Friday when Paul Pratt Library trustees and librarians gathered around to share some refreshments and wish her well on her last day.

Husband was hired five years ago to replace long-time library director Richard Hayes who stepped down after 29 years in the post. Janet Rafferty, who is coming to Cohasset from the Hanson library, assumed the director's post this week.

Husband, who was at the helm for the transition to the new library and got to see it open, was able to spend some time working with Rafferty, so the transition would be a smooth one.

"This is perfect timing," Husband said Friday. "I got to do the fun part.

"I think this is a fitting way to finish a 30-year career," said Husband who has served in five libraries over the years.

"Cohasset was the most fun of all because of the support of the wonderful community and wonderful trustees," she said.

Husband said she was happy Rafferty, the new director, has related experience and lots of energy.

"I feel as though I'm turning the job over to my younger sister and I'm happy about that," she said.

Trustee Sheila Evans, who was chairman of the search committee when Husband was in the running for the Cohasset post, said the trustees are proud of her. She said Husband has also helped shepherd a library building project through in Rockland.

"We couldn't have done it without her," Evans said, about the new Cohasset library.

Preschooler Max Slane digs in the sand during the groundbreaking for the new addition to the South Shore Conservatory last Friday.

Conservatory strikes the right chord

Groundbreaking heralds addition

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's not often the sound of construction work is music to the ears.

But those at the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham are looking forward to the cacophony of bulldozers, drills, and hammers – as the school's expansion that will about double the size of the existing building off Conservatory Drive.

Last Friday, tiny hands armed with small shovels and pails dug in the sand for the celebratory groundbreaking for the $3.5 million project. The children, who were wearing plastic hardhats, attend the arts-oriented preschool at the conservatory that integrates music and visual arts into its curriculum.

Frank Wisneski, president of the board of trustees, told the gathering of Conservatory officials and supporters enrollments have soared to more than 3,000 students per year from 47 communities.

Wisneski said in just a year, the Conservatory had raised $2 million toward its goal. With financing from Hingham Institution for Savings, the project can go forward.

The expansion will add nine teaching studios, three large multi-purpose classrooms, specialized space for dance music therapy and an expanded preschool; gallery space and improved public space.

"People are ready to invest in the community. Not just for themselves but for their neighbor, children and grandchildren."

— Jim Simpson,
South Shore Conservatory

The preschool, under the direction of Carol Sheig, will expand to offer kindergarten in the fall of 2004.

Conservatory director Jim Simpson said it was heartening to see the enthusiastic response to the Conservatory's capital campaign. He said area residents view the Conservatory as an important component of life on the South Shore.

"People are ready to invest in the community," he said. "Not just for themselves but for their neighbor, children and grandchildren.

"They are ready to be part of an investment in the future."

With about 30 preschoolers ready to break ground by digging into a pile of sand with their shovels, Simpson explained youngsters who are introduced to the Conservatory may remain lifelong friends of the organization.

"If they have a fantastic first experience at the Conservatory," he said. "Our hope is as time goes on they will continue to participate."

Sheig, the preschool director, who led her students in a song before they started digging, said the campaign mission of "Building the Future" is especially apropos for the youngsters.

"By exposing preschoolers to the arts and giving them the opportunity to participate in the arts everyday," she said. "We are insuring their future will be enriched by the arts."

Construction is slated to begin in about three weeks, with a grand opening in 2004.

For information on how to participate either as a donor or a volunteer, call Lanci Valentine at 781-749-7565 ext. 23.

The Conservatory, which was established in 1974, offers more than 50 programs and is the largest community music school in the state. In 1996, the Conservatory raised $3.8 million to build a new Duxbury campus, Ellison Center for the Arts, at the former Holy Family Church.

Sailing talk for coastal research center

The Cohasset Yacht Club will continue its annual support for maritime activities by sponsoring a public lecture on Saturday April 12 at 7 p.m. The speakers for this event will be CYC members Martha and Dana Robes who will present a program on their recently concluded five-year around the world cruise on their cruising yacht Sarah Jane, a Little Harbor 48.

During their voyage, the Robes logged more than 40,000 miles sailing west to east. This lecture will focus on a portion of the trip covering roughly the first two years. During this time, the Robes traveled from Florida to Australia, spanning the South Pacific with stops in such exotic locales as the Friendly Islands (Tonga, Vava'u and Ha'apai), French Polynesia, and New Zealand. (All this provides a sharp contrast to last year's speaker Cam Lewis who spent much of his three month circumnavigation avoiding "growlers" in the Southern Ocean!)

The Robes are currently in the process of building a 65-foot glass Hood design in their yard with launching expected in May.

Proceeds from the talk will go to the Cohasset High School Summer Institute's Center for Student Coastal Research. These funds are being specifically earmarked for construction of two Gloucester Gulls. The Gloucester Gull or Light Dory is a 15.5-foot rowing dory that students will construct in order to carry out water quality studies in Cohasset Harbor, the Gulf River, and Little Harbor.

Additionally, in November this group received a grant from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to "enable Cohasset Middle High School students to work as Summer Institute interns re-establishing water quality monitoring in the Gulf River and to assist the Gulf Association in its goal of conducting a Natural Resources Inventory of the Gulf River Watershed."

The location for the lecture will again be St. Anthony's Parish Center and the cost will be $12 per person (students free) if reservations are made by telephone (781) 383-9280, $15 at the door. The lecture is open to the public Details can be obtained by calling Steve Bobo at (781) 383-9280.

Weymouth base developer seeks the community voice

New plan unfolds for former NAS

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

A new day is dawning on a dark fiscal horizon.

A new plan is unfolding at the old South Weymouth Naval Air Station.

And redevelopment officials are asking the community to tell them how to shape this plan.

Marshfield native David S. Hall, vice president for base master developer Lennar Partners, stressed the potential for new revenue for Weymouth and the South Shore area and the importance of input from residents at last Thursday's CNC editorial board meeting at Mariner Newspapers.

"This is a bright opportunity to let revenue flow. These are bad fiscal times for state and local government," Hall said.

Hall is hoping for an ever-increasing turnout at a series of public meeting on base redevelopment hosted by Lennar and the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corporation, the local authority overseeing the former air station. The meeting set for 7 to 9 p.m. on Wednesday, April 9, at the base conference center (the former bowling alley), will include architects presenting their visions.

Redevelopment of the base must be guided by existing economic realities, Hall said. The existing reuse plan for the base, approved in 1998 by town meetings in Weymouth, Rockland, and Abington, does not work in 2003. With the economy cooling and the bottom falling out of the business office market, the 200 million square feet zoned for retail — designed to accommodate a mega shopping mall — must be rezoned for today's economy. The revised plan will eventually create employment and a new tax revenue stream for the three towns.

"Our challenge is to analyze that plan, trying to find a plan and program to satisfy Lennar and the communities. We want people to tell us what they want. If they want a community swimming pool or a soccer complex, they need to tell us. They get to decide what they want. This is a highly interactive process," Hall said.

A mix of housing will be a major component of the new plan. The current plan calls for 700 units of senior housing. The added housing, priced from affordable to high end, would be geared more to young couples just starting out or to "empty nesters," rather than growing families. Because towns can't afford more schools, there is a resistance to housing that would draw young families.

"This is a reality we face," Hall said.

Another reality is that a "mega-mall," such as once planned by Virginia-based Mills Corporation, is also not an option.

"The community does not want retail. That is loud and clear," Hall said. "There is a delicate balance and we have to strike that balance."

Part of the balance is keeping traffic drawn to the site at a minimum. The village community envisioned at the base will be self-contained, with people living, working, and shopping in close proximity. Yet this would not be a "gated community." People would be driving in to shop, have lunch, or use the recreational facilities.

"This will be a community within itself, keeping people out of their cars, servicing all their needs on the base," Hall said.

Redevelopment would be guided by "smart growth," meaning that the life quality of neighboring towns will be protected. Road improvements such as the widening of Route 18 and the redesigning of key intersections are crucial to the revised reuse plan. Yet the revised plan could work without a connector road from Route 3 to the base. The connector road, necessary for the now defunct Mills mall plan, was much opposed in the community.

Residents in the three towns sharing the former air base do have core concerns.

"The towns are all concerned about the environmental cleanup, they are all concerned about when they are going to see some revenue," Hall said

Buildout will take about 15 years, but the major part of the phased-in redevelopment should be done in five years. The three host towns will share income in proportion to the land area in their respective towns. Weymouth will receive 46 percent, Rockland will receive 44 percent, and Abington will receive 12 percent, according to John W. Rogers, chairman of the Tri-Town Corporation board of directors and interim executive director.

"This will be a significant source of income to the South Shore region. There will be millions and millions of dollars coming in," Rogers said. "If the towns had that income now, it would be their salvation."

"This will be a significant source of income to the South Shore region. There will be millions and millions of dollars coming in. If the towns had that income now, it would be their salvation."
— John W. Rogers

The new reuse plan will have to be approved by a two-thirds vote by the Weymouth Town Council and town meetings in Rockland and Abington. The entire comprehensive plan will be presented.

One of the roles Lennar Partners plays is financier. In order to build soccer domes, swimming pools, ice rinks, or nature trails — or construct roads and a water and sewer system — the economic engine of the reuse plan needs to be up and running and generating money. The Tri-Town Corporation has no funding other than state and federal grants and money now received from leasing facilities on site.

"We have to kill our own food," Robert Lundquist, one of Weymouth's two representatives on the five-member board of directors, had said early on.

Rogers described the corporation's efforts to secure the funding needed for infrastructure improvements that are necessary for redevelopment to occur.

"When the agreement with Mills fell apart two years ago, we questioned if we could develop the base ourselves, but we did not have the funding. We considered an agreement with Mass. Development, but the community would lose control, and the state, not the communities, would get the tax revenue. The corporation has no money. We can't ask the towns for any money. That is why we could not go it alone," Rogers said.

Last summer, the Tri-Town board chose to be part of a public-private partnership.

Lennar Partners is the commercial property group of LNR Property Corporation, a worldwide opportunity investor with $3 billion in assets and $1.4 billion to invest, according to Hall.

"LNR is a large company, a very successful company, with plenty of capital. We do not need any outside funding. We have the money, we have experience with base properties," Hall said.

The South Weymouth base will be LNR's sixth conversion. The other five are in California.

"This project is the latest. We couldn't have a better relationship with the Navy. We have a level of trust and confidence. We will continue to do base closures. The Department of Defense is shifting operations overseas. In 2005, there will be a new line of closures. Weymouth was part of the first 100 bases closed. It is a major piece of real estate. Its closure meant a major loss of jobs, a loss of an economic engine," Hall said.

The Navy's Atlantic Division Public Affairs Officer John Peters expressed the Navy's confidence in Lennar.

"We have a good working relationship. Sometimes this process can be a bit cumbersome, but we are getting things done. The package Lennar has put together seems to be solid. Based on their prior experience and the dealings we have had, we have a high level of confidence in Lennar," Peters said.

The Navy is expected to turn over ownership of the entire base to the Tri-Town corporation by the end of the year.

Lennar will also oversee the remaining environmental cleanup of the base, being reimbursed for the cost by the Navy. All of the base conversions have involved environmental cleanups.

"They are all contaminated. Compared to the other bases, South Weymouth is by far the cleanest. It is not to be considered a dangerously contaminated site. There are health concerns, it is a Superfund site, but the cleanup is manageable," Hall said.

"Lennar has good track record with the Navy and a good track record with environmental cleanups," Rogers said.

Fire depts. cash in on grants

By Matthew Gill
MGILL@CNC.COM

During the 1970s, the Plymouth Fire Department more than doubled in manpower. Due to the swift increase in firefighters, training for new recruits was at times "come in the door and grab a hose," said Plymouth Fire Chief Don Brown.

But thanks to grant money from the Federal Emergency Management Agency last year, Plymouth is developing new firefighter training. Brown said the goal is "to catch up on 20 years of training that should have taken place."

In addition the Plymouth Fire Department hired 12 new firefighters last August and five more are to join the department at the end of this month. They're also expecting a turnover of 60 percent over the next five years, making this training for new recruits essential.

Ideally, new recruits would be sent to The Massachusetts Fire Academy for a 13-week firefighter training program, but sometimes it can take a year to get in, said Brown. With new recruits, that's problematic. The FEMA award money is alleviating the situation.

"The grant is enabling us to have all our firefighters trained to F1 and F2 level," said Brown. Instructors from the Massachusetts Fire Fighting Academy have been visiting the seven Plymouth stations to assist the officers, and instruct them on how to train others.

"Now we can do a 6-week in house training program," Brown said.

FEMA representative Bob Waters said programs like Plymouth's are exactly what grant money should be used for. The goal of the federal agency is to reduce deaths by fire by 15 percent over the next five years, said Waters. This year FEMA has $750 million in grant money to help reach that goal.

Waters hosted a workshop at Plymouth Town Hall last week to aid local fire departments in the process of applying for federal aid. Representatives from about 25 local fire departments, including Weymouth, Kingston, and Duxbury, were on hand for the workshop.

Waters described the meeting's agenda as showing the fire chief's "how to fill out grants and navigate the process," and he focused on three points: How applicants can maximize their opportunity; To collaborate and coordinate with the fire service community; To reach fire departments that have not previously applied or possibly not heard of the project.

Applying for a FEMA award "is a competitive process," said Mark Forest, the district director for U.S. Rep William Delahunt D-Quincy. "Today's meeting is to demystify the process."

Applicants can apply for funding in one of four award categories:

- Fire operations and firefighter safety programs.
- Fire prevention programs.
- EMS programs.
- Vehicle Acquisition.

Some of the application requirements set 5 percent as the minimum award for Fire Prevention, and levy a 25 percent cap on award money for fire-related vehicles. Waters urged the group of fire chiefs to "strategically address their critical needs." Many fire departments need vehicles, he said, but of the nearly 20,000 total applications received last year, only 316 vehicles were awarded.

In 2002, FEMA received 19,500 applications nationally, with 5,319 being awarded funding. The total award money was about $334 million.

Massachusetts Fire Departments last year filed 310 applications, with 99 receiving award money. The Bay State's FEMA grants totaled more than $8 million.

Waters said applications which were not awarded money last year are not to be considered failures. "We can only fund so many great programs," he said. "We had $360 million available last year, but more than $2.2 billion in requests."

Communities that win FEMA grants are expected to provide 10 percent of the cost. New this year will be rural, urban, and suburban guidelines that will differentiate the applications. Factors including population density, water supply, and zoning will determine in which of these three categories an application will fall.

FEMA does take 3 percent of the grant money for administrative purposes, but Waters assured that the remaining 97 percent will go directly to the local fire departments, both career and volunteer.

Police-fire station

Voters at Town Meeting on Saturday approved an $800,000 project to improve the town's police and fire station.

The project will expand women's facilities and office space in the station and extend the garage by eight feet in the rear so that when the fire department's 25-year-old ladder truck is retired, its new replacement will fit.

Also, the roof of the garage will be raised two and a half feet so maintenance can be done on fire trucks while inside. Currently, the fire department must take vehicles outside three times a week to perform routine maintenance.

WORSHIP NOTES

Prayers for peace

Saint Stephen's since 1990 has prayed continuously for world peace every Wednesday at 5:30 p.m. in their chapel. The fighting that has begun in Iraq calls directly upon this ministry of prayer for servicemen and women and for the innocent especially the children in Iraq. Prayers are for our troubled world and for all God's people everywhere — for peace, forgiveness and reconciliation. Jesus asks prayers for one another and for enemies as well. Prayer can unite people globally in a way nothing else can. In a 20-minute Wednesday service of Evening Prayer, all innocent victims of war, those who serve sacrificially in the armed forces, all relief and disaster agencies, hospital and care providers, chaplains, the media personnel who influence so much in the world, the President and all in authority, the United Nations and all who work for peace with compassion and justice all over the world are prayed for.

"Lord, make us instruments of your peace." A prayer attributed to St. Francis (BCP, p. 833).

Citizens for life

The South Shore Chapter of Mass. Citizens for Life will meet Tuesday, April 8, at 7:30 p.m. at St. Paul's Parish House (beside the school hall) on Fearing Road. It's grand annual yard-sale fund-raiser will be from 8 a.m. to noon, Saturday, May 10, at St. Jerome Parish Hall, Route 3A, Weymouth. Yard-sale donations will be accepted from 3 to 7 p.m., Friday, May 9, at the hall. Good useable household items (no clothing or large items) are welcome.

The South Shore Chapter meets on the second Tuesday of each month. Donations may be sent to MCFL South Shore, P.O. Box 40, Hingham, 02043. For information, call 781-925-5323.

Author to lead weekend retreat

From Compassion to Action, a weekend retreat workshop with award winning author Jan Phillips will be held on April 5 and 6, at Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham. Phillips is a writer, multi-media artist and inspirational workshop leader. She is the award-winning author of "Marry Your Muse, God is at Eye Level" and "Making Peace: One Woman's Journey Around the World." Phillips states: "We are the help we have been waiting for. We are the light of the world we inhabit. It is our time to speak, act and be tender and powerful....come bring your light to the dark, warmth to the chill." Call for details and to register 781-383-9184. Registration is $195 and includes three meals. This workshop is being sponsored by the Spirituality and Healing forum of the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset.

Abbey series on 'Other Voices'

The Glastonbury Abbey series will host Dr. Harvey Cox whose topic is "Hope and Expectation" on Thursday, April 3 at 7:15 p.m. at the Abbey. This is the next installment of the Abbey's for 2002-03 series, Listening to Other Voices: Hope in a Time of Uncertainty.

A teacher at Harvard Divinity School since the early 1960s, Dr. Cox is currently the Victor S. Thomas Professor of Divinity at Harvard. An American Baptist Minister, his research and teaching interests are in the areas of urbanization, world Christianity, and the ministry of the church in the global setting. Cox has been visiting professor at Brandeis University, Seminario Bautista de Mexico and the Narope Institute.

Cox is a prolific and acclaimed author of many titles including "The Secular City," "The Feast of Fools," "Many Mansions: A Christian's Encounters with Other Faiths." He also writes a column for beliefnet.com.

Please call to reserve a place at 781-749-2155. A free-will offering is always appreciated.

Insights on spiritual healing

Have you ever wondered:

How Christian Science healing works? If it is specific prayer that heals or just a general state of faith; or how you can bring spiritual healing into your own life?

Evan Mehlenbacher of Easton will discuss answers to these questions and offer insights on the practice of Christian healing at a free lecture-workshop to be given Thursday evening, April 10 at 7:30 in the Minot Room of the Nantasket Clarion Hotel's Conference Center at 45 Hull Shore Drive in Hull.

After earning a B.A. degree in economics from Stanford University, Mehlenbacher worked for several years in his family's farming business in Washington state. Here he saw the effect of prayer at work in his daily life. Before long, people began asking him to pray for them and his public practice of healing through the power of prayer was born.

Mehlenbacher has lectured throughout North America at conventions, conferences, bookstores, colleges, hospitals, Internet events, interdenominational gatherings and churches. He has addressed topics such as, "Spiritual Help You Can Trust" and "A Spiritual Approach to Terrorism," among many others.

Today, he is manager of the Christian Science Board of Lectureship in Boston, a practitioner of spiritual healing and an authorized teacher of Christian Science.

There is no charge for this event which is open to the public. All are welcome.

'Reasons for Hope'

St. Anthony Church, at 10 Summer Street in Cohasset, invites the public to its Mission "Reasons for Hope" to be given by Rev. Harry Cain, S.J. and Virginia Blass, M.A., M.Ed. on Sunday, April 6 through Wednesday, April 9 at 7:30 p.m.. Find out how God accepts you just the way you are!

Free 10-week Alpha course

Alpha is a free, 10-week course that has been significant for people all over the world. It is a practical introduction to the Christian faith and Alpha tries to answer the questions:

"What is the point of life?...What happens when we die?...What relevance does Jesus have for my daily life today?...How do we deal with guilt?" and more.

Each week, people meet together for a meal, a talk on topics such as, "Who is Jesus?" and "Why did Jesus die?" and "How can I be sure that Jesus really rose from the dead?" and "Does God still heal today?".

People who take the Alpha course come from many backgrounds and for many reasons. Protestant and Catholic clergy have remarked that Alpha has the greatest impact on the people who don't go to church.

Alpha is for everyone: Catholics, Protestants, atheists and agnostics; those who want to investigate Christianity; those who want to brush up on the basics; and those who feel they've never really "got going" as a Christian.

For more information on Alpha, please call 781-383-6792.

OBITUARY

Brian L. Riddell

Brian L. Riddell

Brian L. Riddell, age 64, of Scituate and formerly of Ridgefield, Conn. and London, England, U.K., died suddenly on March 26, 2003 at Massachusetts General Hospital of metastatic melanoma.

Born in London, England, he was the son of the late Leslie and Ann (McManoman) Riddell. He was educated in England at St. Mary's College of the University of London.

He was the retired executive vice president of the Boston Stock Exchange and prior to being at the Boston Stock Exchange, he was at the New York Stock Exchange for many years. After his retirement in 1992, he was a consultant to new and merging stock markets throughout Europe, including Prague, Sofia, Bulgaria and Cairo, Egypt. Mr. Riddell was also on the board of directors for the Boston Stock Exchange and several other financial memberships.

He leaves his wife, Mary E. (O'Keeffe) Riddell; his son, Christian L. Riddell of Scituate; his two daughters, Tracy Phelan of Quincy and Karen Riddell of Scituate; a brother, Patrick J. Riddell of Davenport, Fla. and Manchester, England.

A funeral Mass was celebrated March 31 at St. Anthony Church in Cohasset. Interment was in Mount Hope Cemetery, Scituate.

Funeral arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Donations may be made in Mr. Riddell's memory to the Massachusetts General Hospital Cancer Center, Attention: Shana Novak, Charles River Plaza, Suite #600, Boston 02114.

"Not Fade Away" by Buddy Holly (later to be covered by the Rolling Stones), "Willie and the Hand Jive" by the Johnny Otis Show, "Magic Bus" by the Who, "She's the One" by Bruce Springsteen and "I Want Candy" by the Strangeloves (later to be covered by Bow Wow Wow). All of these classic rock hits have one more thing in common — they all became classic by serving up in their own style what is known in rock and roll annals as the Bo Diddley Beat.

These songs are just a sampling of the scope of influence rendered by the man who is the originator of one of rock's most timeless rhythmic styles. The Diddley Beat ("Bomp, Ba-Bomp-Bomp, Bomp-Bomp," as some journalists have attempted to capture in print) is such a trademark, distinctive rock sound, yet so indescribable, that it's generally become known simply by the name of its creator. Bo Diddley himself has simply termed it the shave-and-a-haircut-six-bits beat, while scores of rock analysts and historians over time have pointed out the style's early guitar innovations of using distortion and tremolo effects as well as double simultaneous rhythms and even tracing its origins back to the ancient African Yoruba and Kongo cultures of Nigeria.

"I always like to play a mix of old and new songs in my live sets, including the hits people know plus other stuff they might not have heard yet. I do what I do best and try to keep it from being repetitive. I like to give the people a show as always, so tell the fans I'll be there and ready to go."
Bo Diddley

But such scholarly knowledge is not necessary to simply rock out and enjoy the music. Diddley's Boston area fans will get a chance to do just that when the rock 'n' roll/blues/R&B legend appears in concert at Plymouth

South Shore students to take in 'Circus of the Senses'

On Thursday, April 10 more than 1,000 Massachusetts children with sensory impairments will gather beneath the Big Apple Circus' Big Top at Fan Pier (28-70 Old Northern Avenue, near the Federal Courthouse, Boston) to experience the magic and joy of the Circus of the Senses®. Children from all over the Commonwealth will be on hand, including students from the Monatiquot School in Braintree, Duxbury Middle School, Randolph High School, the Sparrell and Grace F. Cole Schools in Norwell, and the Holy Ghost Parch Center in Whitman.

A $250,000 grant from the Hasbro Children's Foundation has made it possible for the Big Apple Circus to present Circus of the Senses® (a special performance for blind and deaf children) free of charge in cities along its national tour route, including Boston, for three years.

"To see a child smile or to hear them laugh is a wonderful gift; to be part of a program that brings the wonder of the Circus to children who are blind and deaf is an unbelievable joy. We are proud to be able to bring the Big Apple Circus' Circus of the Senses® to four cities across the United States. We encourage other arts organizations to create similar programs, and hope other foundations will join us to help bring this joy to millions more children," said Ellen Block, Chairman, Hasbro Children's Foundation. Additional funding for this year's Boston performance is provided by the Marino Foundation of Holliston.

Big Apple Circus performers wow the crowd.

"The Circus has produced this uniquely designed performance annually in New York for more than a decade, and we are very grateful to the Hasbro Children's Foundation for making it possible for us to expand this program, and to the Marino Foundation for their funding in Boston," said Paul Binder, Big Apple Circus founder and artistic director.

This performance is accomplished by providing headsets to children who are visually impaired to hear a lively, running description of the action in the ring narrated by Paul Binder and Michael Christensen, co-founder and creative director of the Big Apple Circus. Movie star returns to the military with new film

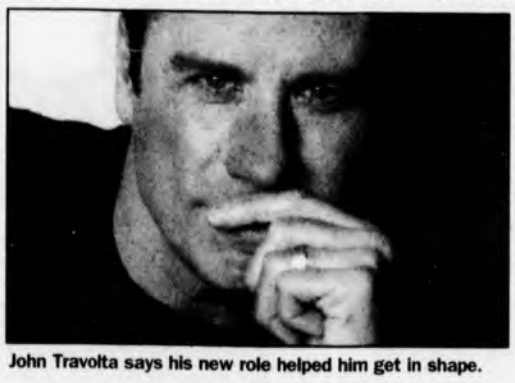
By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

John Travolta is ripped. He's not mad; he's fit. Trim and muscular — he's as firm as his handshake — he's possibly fitter than he's ever been.

Part of the reason for being so buff is professional: In his new film, "Basic," he plays a former army Ranger and problem-solver who's called back into the fold when some recruits start turning up dead or missing. But the other reason for his newfound fitness is personal: Travolta just thought it was time to get rid of the flab.



John Travolta says his new role helped him get in shape.

"It started a few years ago when I just wanted to get healthy again," he says. "I had kind of let it go for all these parts. I thought, 'Well, no one cares how I look onscreen, so if I'm the president" — as he was in "Primary Colors" — "or if I'm a fat angel — the character he played in "Michael" — "it doesn't matter. But then I realized that I was still finding it hard to breathe after a while. So I started to get in shape, and then this role came along where I was going to be an ex-Ranger, that he was buff, that he wore a tattoo on his bicep. So I decided that I had to step up to the plate and really get in good shape."

This new role marks a return to the military for the actor, who's also appeared in "The General's Daughter," "The Thin Red Line" and "Broken Arrow."

"I find the military people fascinating because there are all these different types," he says. "There's the warmonger and the patriot and someone in between. I find the mix of all that very interesting. I find the discipline interesting, too. I like discipline in a certain way, and I like organizational skills. So I can identify with it on that level. I think it's the military persona and precision that I get attracted to."

In order to research his role of the soldier with a "colorful background" who is, of course, the only guy the army can turn to when they have a problem, Travolta actually signed up for a training course with the Rangers.

"That was very difficult to take part in," he says. "There's very high security on that, and we got a waiver to go through Washington to allow me to do it. It was tough training, but at the end of the day, it was sad. The next day the battalion was off to the Middle East and I was thinking, 'God, I'm just pretending here. And these guys are actually going'."

Travolta has never been in the military, but he has been seen in uniform, in a series of TV ads for Australia-based airline Qantas. Last summer, the avid pilot became the company's "ambassador-at-large" and flew his own plane — an ex-Qantas Boeing 707 — around the world in what was billed as a "Spirit of Friendship" tour.

Travolta's bright blue eyes light up when asked about the experience.

"That tour was outstanding," he says, of the 35,000-mile flight that took him from Los Angeles, west to New Zealand, Australia, Singapore, Hong Kong, Tokyo, London, Rome, Paris, Frankfurt and New York, then back to Los Angeles. "One of my childhood dreams was to be associated with an airline. And to fly around the world was

Bean dip worth eating

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

There are two basic types of bean dip: one made with chick-peas and the other made with white beans such as cannellini or navy beans. If one adds tahini (puréed sesame seeds) and lemon juice to the former, the result is hummus. The problem with all of these recipes is that they are absurdly simple and therefore often lackluster. Each ingredient has to be handled properly.

The first question I had to answer is whether canned beans, which save at least an hour of cooking time, are worth eating. The answer is an emphatic no! Since the taste of the beans is everything here, you really have to begin with dried beans and cook them yourself. (Home-cooked beans are nutty, earthy, and richly flavored.) Otherwise you are serving "bean dip" which really lives up to its horrid reputation.

The beans are cooked in plenty of water with a 1/2 teaspoon of salt. Chick-peas took 90 minutes and white beans just short of an hour, depending on the size of the beans. Next, I found that 2 tablespoons of the cooking liquid for the chick-peas (1 tablespoon for the white beans) and high quality olive oil were necessary to moisten, flavor, and thin the puree. (A food processor worked better than a blender for this task.) Garlic was an optional ingredient but I found that one small pressed clove added a bit of punch and flavor. A modest 1/8-teaspoon of salt was also necessary, the small quantity reflective of the use of salted cooking water with the beans.

For the hummus, I added one tablespoon of tahini and a tablespoon and a half of lemon juice. Some cooks also add cayenne pepper to hummus or hot paprika, which I find to be an optional ingredient.

For the white bean puree, a common Tuscan dish, one medium sage leaf added to the purée was very good, better in fact, than other herbs such as rosemary, thyme, or parsley. This variation is best served with grilled or toasted bread, which has first been brushed with a bit of olive oil and then rubbed with a clove of garlic. (See QUICK CROSTINI recipe below.)

CHICK-PEA DIP

This recipe is enough for a small group but can easily be doubled for a crowd. You can prepare the beans up to two days ahead. The finished purée may also be held covered in the refrigerator for a day or two without compromising the fresh flavor. This purée is delicious served with crostini or European-style bread.

1/4 pound dried chick-peas, rinsed and picked over

1/2 plus 1/8 teaspoon salt

2 tablespoons high quality extra virgin olive oil

1 small garlic clove, chopped or pressed (optional)

Pinch of cayenne or hot paprika (optional)

1. Place the beans and enough water to cover by three inches in a medium saucepan over medium-high heat and bring to a boil. Reduce heat to maintain a simmer and add 1/2-teaspoon salt. Simmer, covered for about 1 1/2 hours or until the beans are soft and tender. Let cool to room temperature.

2. Drain the beans reserving liquid. Place the beans in the bowl of a food processor fitted with the metal blade. Add two tablespoons of the cooking liquid, the olive oil, the remaining 1/8 teaspoon salt, and the optional garlic and purée until very smooth, about 2 minutes, scraping down the sides of the bowl if necessary. Taste for seasoning adding more salt and optional cayenne or paprika if desired. Serve immediately.

Makes about 1 1/2 cups.

WHITE BEAN DIP

Try a light sprinkle of coarse salt over this dip when served on crostini or any sort of toasted bread. The best olive oil is crucial. A recent taste-test found that Columela-Hojiblanca, a Spanish oil, is a terrific bargain and has great flavor. (This is a mail order or specialty food store item and costs $24 per liter, which is a bargain compared to similar oils costing up to $80 per liter.)

4 ounces cannellini or navy beans

1/2 plus 1/8 teaspoon salt

2 tablespoons best quality olive oil

1 medium size fresh sage leaf torn into small pieces

1 small clove garlic, chopped or pressed (optional)

Freshly ground black pepper to taste

1. Place the beans and enough water to cover by two inches in a medium saucepan over medium-high heat and bring to a boil. Reduce heat to maintain a simmer and add 1/2-teaspoon salt. Simmer, covered for about 55 minutes or until the beans are soft and tender. Let cool to room temperature.

2. Drain the beans reserving liquid. Place the beans in the bowl of a food processor fitted with the metal blade. Add one tablespoon of the cooking liquid, the olive oil, the remaining 1/8 teaspoon salt, the sage, optional garlic, freshly ground black pepper to taste and puree until very smooth, about 1 minute, scraping down the sides of the bowl if necessary. Taste for seasoning adding more salt if needed. Serve immediately.

Makes about 1 1/2 cups.

QUICK CROSTINI

Cut a crusty European-style loaf of bread into 1/2-inch slices. Brush each side with olive oil and place on grill (preferred) or under broiler until well browned on first side. Turn and brown on remaining side. Remove from heat and gently rub one side of bread with a peeled garlic clove. Repeat with additional slices and garlic until all of the bread has been rubbed. Be careful to rub gently or the garlic flavor will be overwhelming. Serve with garlic-rubbed side facing up.

Prepare your landscapes for springtime

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Springtime in New England is truly a magical time of year as our dormant landscapes gradually awaken from their long winter naps. Lawns and gardens seem to yawn and stretch as subtle hints of color appear here and there. Each day, Mother Nature applies another brush stroke of color to the broadening palette of the emerging spring landscape. Early bulbs poke through the soil dotting our gardens with patches of crocuses and daffodils creating a welcome, multicolored tapestry. Although many of these blossoms are fleeting, their combined splendor quickly extinguishes lingering memories of a miserable winter season.

A week of nearly perfect springtime weather provided an ideal opportunity to begin the lengthy process of spring cleaning my extensive perennial borders. Several hours of clipping and raking yielded numerous tarps overflowing with garden refuse which I hauled to the top of my mountainous compost pile.

Once a garden was trimmed and raked, it was closely inspected for the presence of weeds. It is never too early to begin the never-ending chore of pulling these misplaced wildflowers. Experienced gardeners may be able to identify numerous varieties but even a novice should be able to recognize dandelions and grass which are easier to extricate at this time of year while surrounding plants are just beginning to appear and the soil is loose and workable. As the season progresses, weed removal becomes more challenging as perennials grow and expand often hiding dandelions and their allies which soon flower and start spreading seeds and offspring all over the garden. The secret to a reasonably weed-free garden is to weed early and often before seeds are produced and then to spread a layer of mulch to reduce further germination. When in doubt, it may be worth leaving unidentified seedlings in place and closely monitoring their development as these may be forgotten perennials or chance seedlings from desirable annuals and perennials that can be transplanted later in the season.

Spring is the ideal time to transplant many trees and shrubs as long as the soil around these woody plants is not soggy. It is best to transplant deciduous trees and shrubs before their leaves appear. Soft-barked trees, such as magnolias, cherries, birches and dogwoods should only be moved in spring. Broad-leafed evergreens, including rhododendrons, mountain laurels and andromedas, are also best transplanted at this time of year. Forsythia can be uprooted while flowering but should be relocated before the leaves appear.

Prepare a new hole 2 to 3 times the width of the rootball of the plant being moved but dig it only deep enough to enable you to reset the tree or shrub at the same level as it was previously growing. Setting the plant's rootball too deeply is one of the primary causes for woody plant failures. Add superphosphate and moistened peat moss or compost to the soil taken from the hole. Avoid planting in heavy, wet, clay soils.

Once you have prepared your new hole, you are ready to begin the process of transplanting. For trees, it is important to create a root ball large enough to support its upper growth. A general rule is to allow one foot of root ball for each inch of diameter of the tree's trunk. For example, a tree having a trunk one inch in diameter would require a root ball one foot across, or 6 inches from the base of the trunk all the way around.

Use a spade initially to slice the roots by cutting straight down. Then use a shovel to remove the soil beyond the perimeter of these roots and finally, dig beneath to gradually produce a well-rounded ball. Before lifting the plant out of the hole, it is wise to wrap the root ball with burlap to keep the soil intact around the roots and then tie it in place. Determine its best side once the plant has been lifted and position it accordingly before lowering it into the new hole.

After placing the tree or shrub in the hole, backfill with your amended soil halfway and water thoroughly. Allow the water to settle and then finish filling the hole. Firm the soil around the plant. Create a moat of mounded soil to keep water contained and leave a hose trickling at its base until the ground is thoroughly wet. Trees and shrubs need a slow, deep watering to reach all roots. Add a layer of mulch over the area to reduce evaporation and prevent weeds but avoid allowing the mulch to touch the bark as this may lead to diseases or insect infestations.

Routine deep watering is critical for the survival of newly set trees and shrubs during the weeks following their transfer to new locations. Superficial watering by sprinklers is rarely sufficient to reach the deeper roots of woody plants. When Mother Nature does not provide, be sure to supplement rainfall with a slowly trickling hose or a soaker hose to ensure the success of your transplants.

A week of glorious spring weather culminated in a soggy weekend of monsoon-like moisture and flooded landscapes, as straw-colored lawns seemed to turn green overnight. A day later, our greening landscapes were overlaid with a dusting of snow, a reminder of just how fickle New England weather can be. Patience must prevail during these early days of spring until warmth and dry weather offer more suitable conditions to proceed with our springtime projects.

The beat goes on

Memorial Hall this Saturday, April 5 at 7:30 p.m. The opening act is Boston-bred blues-masters the James Montgomery Band, replacing cancelled original opener Buddy Miles.

"I've always liked the idea of having a beat and a rhythm performed by so many others in my name. I'm not sure I like the idea that I don't get paid," said Diddley.

Bo's Beat, of course, continues to haunt the rock art form ("Desire" by U2 and "Noone to Run With" by the Allman Brothers Band are two of the more recent examples). It's also the signature of some of the master's own original hits, such as "Bo Diddley," "I'm a Man" and "Who Do You Love?" But in a career spanning five decades, the Beat is just a proverbial bucket-drop in the sum total of the singer/guitarist's musical output, which has encompassed every imaginable style of roots rock 'n' roll and R&B, plus blues, modern rock, jazz and even pop.

Born Elias McDaniel in McComb, Mississippi and moving to Chicago at age eight, Diddley, now 74, actually began his musical life studying classical violin, but took up blues and R&B after hearing one of his early idols, blues legend John Lee Hooker. As a youngster in Chicago, McDaniel spent time as an amatuer boxer (where he acquired what later became his stage name) before moving into music full-time. In 1955, he recorded his first single for Chess Records, which became the double-sided hit "Bo Diddley/I'm a Man," the A-side adapted from an old song that McDaniel/Diddley knew in the Black street-slang Dirty Dozens tradition of jokes, jive-talking and putdowns.

Diddley mentioned that he's recently got back into his regular performing schedule, playing mainly on weekends, adding that he cut back on travelling somewhat after 9/11/01.

"I always like to play a mix of old and new songs in my live sets, including the hits people know plus other stuff they might not have heard yet," he said. "I do what I do best and try to keep it from being repetitive. I like to give the people a show as always, so tell the fans I'll be there and ready to go."

Bo Diddley will perform Saturday, April 5 at 7:30 p.m. at Plymouth Memorial Hall, 83 Court Street, Plymouth. For tickets and information call 866/468-7619 or visit www.ticketweb.com a personal dream. At times it was a navigational challenge because you're over the ocean for such a long period of time. But that's the fun part. The low point was that I underestimated how exhausting it would be. By the time I got to Japan, we had a mechanical [checkup] that I was so thankful for, because it gave me five days off. Then I rekindled and I was all happy and refreshed again."

Travolta's acting career has had more take-offs and landings than that long series of flights. A huge success in "Welcome Back Kotter," he popped up in a couple of films — "Carrie" was the most notable — before striking gold with "Saturday Night Fever."

He remembers not having a clue as to how big that film was going to be.

"I thought I was doing a little art film," he says, laughing. "I thought I was doing a slice-of-life art film. I had just given up "Days of Heaven" because the network wouldn't let me out of 'Kotter.' I wasn't happy about that. But then I got offered this other art film called 'Saturday Night Fever'."

An interesting point is that Richard Gere eventually got the part in "Days of Heaven," and Gere is currently in "Chicago," another role that Travolta had turned down.

"I was asked to do 'Chicago' a few times," he says. "My mistake was that I never met with the director. He had this vision that was kept a secret. Usually you meet with the director and they let you in on what they're going to do. This was just an offer that ended at the offer."

Even more interesting is the fact that over the years, Travolta also turned down roles in "Breathless," "An Officer and Gentleman" and "American Gigolo," all of which went to Gere. Travolta says the two have never discussed it.

"And I have other fun careers that I helped to make by not taking a part," he says with a smile. "The Tom Hanks role in 'Splash' — that was written for me. And believe it or not, the Dudley Moore part in 'Arthur.' But I think I took 'Urban Cowboy' instead of that one."

And he took Quentin Tarantino's "Pulp Fiction," a movie that would change everything for him when good parts had stopped coming his way. Asked once and for all to tell what was in the film's infamous glowing briefcase, Travolta shakes his head and says, "We will never know, because Quentin will never reveal it. So it's all subjective, all personal. Some people think it's greed, some people think it's God."

He stops talking for a moment, then flashes the smile again and says, "It's actually a light bulb, a green light bulb."

"Basic" opened nationally March 28.

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

DON'T WAIT TO HELP YOURSELF

Because most hearing-impaired individuals wait far too long before getting hearing instruments, they forget what it is like to have normal hearing. As a result, traffic noises and even voices may seem very loud when using a hearing instrument for the first time. Thus, hearing instruments cannot be compared with prescription eyeglasses, which can provide perfect vision upon the first wearing. Hearing instruments require that their users get used to hearing differently. This requires practice. Even if your hearing instrument irritates you a bit at first, do not put it away in your dresser drawer. Instead, bear in mind that fitting is an ongoing process that requires a good and ongoing dialogue with your hearing instrument dispenser.

Don't save your hearing for special occasions. Consistently wearing your hearing instrument is the only way it will be of benefit to you, by giving you the chance to test it in different situations and helping you grow more proficient at using it. If you are ready to find out the many ways and the many devices now available to improve your hearing, we welcome you to stop by FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), Weymouth, across from the Stetson Bldg., or call us at 781-337-1144 to arrange a free hearing evaluation. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits, and Mass Health.

P.S. Only about twenty percent of those who could benefit from the use of a hearing instrument actually get one.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2

A harmonious alignment of the sun and Neptune helps to take the edge off a fiery Aries moon. It serves as a reminder to slow down and enjoy the moment. On the other hand, this is a great day to get things done and to initiate new activities. Go for the gold. It is best to launch ventures before 2:16 p.m., when the moon interacts with Saturn. However, the green light remains on until 5:05 p.m. At this time the moon aligns with Mercury and becomes inactive.

THURSDAY, APRIL 3

The giant planet Jupiter takes the spotlight today. At 10:03 p.m. Jupiter, standing at 8-degrees Leo, begins to travel in direct motion. It generates feelings of optimism, confidence and can bring luck and opportunities to some. The moon enters Taurus at 3:20 a.m. This day is ideal for beginning new activities, selling or purchasing land, property. Lunar contacts to Jupiter and Venus may spark romantic passions this evening.

FRIDAY, APRIL 4

The Taurus moon aligns with Neptune at 5:13 a.m., making for a slow start to this day. Allow extra time to get where you are going. Planetary influences turn around as the day goes on. If you have a clear plan of action, you can be most productive. Initiate new activities before 7:15 p.m., when the moon aligns with Mars and becomes inactive. Lighten up, relax and unwind this evening.

SATURDAY, APRIL 5

An inactive Taurus moon prompts you to take a break from daily routines and responsibilities; kick back and enjoy the good things in life. If you are working, finish projects rather than starting anything new. Mercury moves into Taurus at 9:38 a.m., remaining there until June 12. A lively Gemini moon takes over at 4:24 p.m., setting the stage for an exciting evening. The moon and Mercury align with Uranus; go with your adventurous side.

SUNDAY, APRIL 6

A Gemini moon sets the stage for a 'fun' day. All communications are highlighted; chat, surf, network. Get in touch with old friends or develop new alliances. Be more spontaneous and open-minded. The moon interacts with Jupiter in the morning, Venus and Neptune this evening.

MONDAY, APRIL 7

Storm clouds move in this morning. Resolve to maintain a sense of humor. Take it slow and easy; give greater attention to accuracy, details. Finish old business, make repairs, tackle odd jobs and errands. The moon opposes Pluto at 9:32 a.m. and conjoins with Saturn at 5:34 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Kick back and mellow out completely this evening.

TUESDAY, APRIL 8

The moon enters the sign Cancer at 5:36 a.m., and the green light goes on for new beginnings across the board. This moon forms harmonious contacts to Uranus in the morning and Mercury this afternoon. Keep an open mind. Be willing to experiment with new ideas; be open to new experiences. Influences are particularly favorable for making major purchases for your home, buying or selling property. Be more nurturing and sensitive to the needs of others. You can work out differences and improve the quality of key relationships.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9

Yesterday's planetary patterns affect today as well. The Cancer moon forms a harmonious contact to Venus at 11:40 a.m. The first quarter phase occurs at 7:40 p.m., beginning the windup to a full moon that will culminate April 16. However, an alignment of the sun and Pluto takes center stage. This is an excellent day to launch a self-improvement program; start a diet, recognize and break a bad habit, begin an exercise or a meditation schedule.

THURSDAY, APRIL 10

It can be difficult to stay on track with practical matters this morning. The Cancer moon opposes Mars at 1:34 a.m. and becomes inactive. Mercury forms a 90-degree alignment to Jupiter at 7:08 a.m., warning you to choose your words carefully. Don't make impulsive decisions, purchases or promises. Avoid arrogant, self-righteous behavior. The moon enters Leo at 2:54 p.m., beginning a period that rates high for launching important enterprises. This favorable period is in effect between 2:54 p.m.-5:46 a.m. tomorrow, when the moon and Jupiter conjoin.

FRIDAY, APRIL 11

A Leo moon all day generates an upbeat mood. However, lunar alignments to Mercury at 8:31 a.m. and Neptune at 2:14 p.m. place important signings or decisions off limits. Don't take on anything too stressful or tedious in this period. However, the green light goes on at 2:30 p.m. for new starts in your business or personal life. The evening tops the charts for fun and games. Gather with friends and go for the good times.

Final say on village looks

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Selectmen are moving forward rapidly in an attempt to finalize plans for the village streetscape revitalization project, while some Planning Board members are saying they have been left behind.

Selectmen will hold a final public hearing on the design next Tuesday, inviting residents and merchants to comment for the last time.

Several issues remain to be decided. Merchants need to decide if they will fund designs for burying conduits so utility wires can be put underground in the future. And selectmen need to decide, among other issues, on the width and final layout of parking spaces, as well as the placement of crosswalks.

The latter two issues were topics of concern at previous meetings between merchants

Override, Sullivan win

Turnout was 47 percent

"This was probably the most competitive race I've been in."
— Selectman Michael Sullivan

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Bad weather didn't stop voters from heading to the polls on Saturday, where they approved a $350,000 general override and reelected Michael Sullivan to the Board of Selectmen.

Almost half of the town's registered voters — 47 percent — cast ballots, despite dreary skies, high winds and scattered showers throughout the day. Candidates for selectman spent time with their strongest supporters, waving from underneath umbrellas as voters turned the corner onto Highland Avenue towards Town Hall.

Even John McNabb, who ran unopposed for the Water Commission, toughed it out in the wind and rain with his campaign sign. "You gotta do it," he said. "I love campaigning."

When it was all said and done, the general override, which town officials said was needed to avoid further cuts and layoffs of municipal and school employees, passed by a margin of less than 250 votes.

Avalon is on the hot seat

Wastewater plan, financial impact top list of concerns

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Residents told members of the Zoning Board Monday why they should deny AvalonBay Estates a comprehensive permit for a 200-unit apartment complex on Route 3A.

The greatest concern was about the Water Commission's belief that Avalon's wastewater system would pollute the town's water supply. But some also said the rapid growth caused by the development would flood the schools and create a demand for town services without proportional tax revenue to pay for them.

AvalonBay representatives did attend the meeting, which is part of the Zoning Board's ongoing public hearing on the project.

Nathaniel Palmer of Little Harbor Road spoke on behalf of Cohasset Action, a group that is pushing for reform of Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law that allows developers like AvalonBay to apply for comprehensive permits.

Palmer said AvalonBay's study that showed the development would attract between 35 and 60 school-aged children was flawed. He said the towns used in the study were not comparable to Cohasset because they were surrounded by towns with better schools, while Cohasset was surrounded by towns with "lesser schools," so it would attract more families with schoolchildren.

Palmer said if Avalon brought 100 new children into Cohasset public schools, it would cost the school department $650,000 a year, but anticipated new tax revenues would only cover

Neighbors are NIMBYs when it comes to seagulls

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A Forest Avenue couple may be taking the word "friends" in the phrase "feathered friends" to a new level.

To that end the Board of Health will invite Mr. and Mrs. James Tillotson, 240 Forest Ave., to an upcoming meeting to ask them to stop feeding the seagulls in their yard.

But Cynthia Tillotson says she stopped feeding the seagulls months ago, but the pesky creatures are still circling around when she goes outside to fill the six or seven bird feeders in her yard – a practice that she's continued for her 32 years in town and has no intention of stopping.

"They're hoping," she says about the seagulls that return to her yard looking for food.

In the meantime, the Tillotsons' neighbors aren't happy – and they haven't been for some time.

"The scene is reminiscent of Alfred Hitchcock's 'The Birds' except with seagulls instead of crows."
— Neighborhood petition

The issue took root back in the summer, when about seven neighbors on Forest Avenue and Surry Drive sent a petition to the Board of Health and animal control officer, asking the town to insist the Tillotsons stop feeding seagulls.

The neighbors allege the Tillotsons were feeding seagulls on the flat roof over their family room. But the seagulls would not only roost on the Tillotsons' roof but on the roofs of surrounding homes, causing damage.

"The scene is reminiscent of Alfred Hitchcock's 'The Birds' except with seagulls instead of crows," the petition stated.

"The seagulls defecate on the roofs, garage sidings, cars, driveways, and lawns of neighborhood properties, and people have been hit too," the neighbors said. "At times when the seagulls are circling, children and adults are reluctant to go out into their yard, for fear of being a target."

McMorris named Selectmen Chairman

Selectman Ronnie McMorris was named chairman of the Board of Selectmen Tuesday after Selectman Michael Sullivan's term as chairman expired. This is the second time McMorris has served as chairman. The selectmen choose their chairmen based on a yearly rotation.

Two vacancies on town committees

Selectmen are looking to fill a vacancy on the Common Historic District Commission created when former member Alex Adkins resigned due to personal commitments. The position is reserved for an architect.

Selectmen are also looking for applicants for a position on the Housing Authority. The vacancy was created when former member Jane Nawn Harris resigned because she moved out of town. Selectmen have said this Friday is the last day to submit applications for this position at Town Hall.

Town employee healthcare costs

Town Manager Mark Haddad is in the process of forming an advisory committee of representatives from all unions involved with the Town. Haddad seeks to negotiate a change to the co-payment amount in employees' health plans, from $5 to $10 or $15.

Under Chapter 32B of state law, the committee must be formed so each union's position on the change is represented. Haddad said he will keep the committee intact until this fall, when he may seek to lessen the overall percentage of employee health care that is covered by the Town.

Cemetery upkeep

Winter wreaths and baskets must be removed from all town cemeteries by April 15, DPW Supt. Carl Sestito said.

Keep well clinic

The Board of Health will sponsor the following Keep Well Clinic:

- Thursday April 24 from 1-3 p.m. at the Harborview Senior Housing on Elm Street.

Parking crackdown

Town Manager Mark Haddad said Cohasset Police are planning to step up enforcement of one hour parking in Cohasset Village. Selectmen have agreed to add new one hour parking signs in front of Citgo and the Red Lion Inn. Overtime parking is a $25 fine in Cohasset.

Upcoming meetings

Flag depository at American Legion

The American Legion, George H. Mealy Post 118 in Cohasset has a way for the public to be able to bring them their tattered and worn flags so they may be properly and ceremoniously destroyed. The Flag Depository, located in front of the legion post at 98 Summer St., has the look and shape of an American flag. This solid metal Flag Depository protects the flags until they are removed for storage and kept until the time of the desecration ceremony. The Herb Chambers Automobile Dealerships made this new service possible through a donation to the post. Everyone is invited to bring his or her retired flags to the depository.

Starbucks Coffee slated for 3A plaza

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Move over Dunkin' Donuts — Starbucks may be coming to town.

Starbucks would like to move into the former Fleet Bank building at the far end of Tedeschi Plaza, just a few doors down from the Dunkin' Donuts at Leo's Exxon.

Fleet vacated the freestanding, clapboard building last year and moved across the street into the former Newport Creamery site.

According to Building Inspector Bob Egan, Starbucks falls loosely into the "fast food category." Fast Food establishments need a special permit from the Zoning Board of Appeals before they can operate in Cohasset. Starbucks sells coffee and espresso beverages, along with pastries and confections, coffee-related accessories and equipment.

The ZBA hearing is at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, April 22, at Town Hall.

According to plans on file at Town Hall, Starbucks plans some outdoor seating and a drive-thru.

Starbucks Coffee Company owns Starbucks. Starbucks, which went public in 1992, does not franchise its operations. Its common stock is traded on Nasdaq under the symbol SBUX. For more about Starbucks, visit starbucks.com

Affleck and Lopez rumored to have bought Scituate house

The rumor that Hollywood heavyweights Ben Affleck and Jennifer Lopez have purchased a multi-million-dollar home in Scituate near the Cohasset line is just that — a rumor.

It was the talk of the town yesterday that Ben and Jenny from the Block scooped up an oceanfront manse on Wood Island [in Scituate's Indian Trail neighborhood] being marketed by Grand Gables Real Estate for a cool $2.9 million. The property is listed as having 11 rooms on 6.1 acres of secluded land. A spokesman for the real estate office said the news is purely rumor.

When reached by phone, someone who declined to be identified at the Wood Island Road home, said there's no truth to the story. Asked if the home had been sold, the person said, "I'm not going to say anything, but I will tell you that she (Lopez) did not buy the house. It's all a rumor."

Causing more speculation among some in town was the fact that the listed property was yanked off the Grand Gables Web site late yesterday morning. The Web site listing detailed that the property has four bedrooms, three bathrooms and is just over 5,000 square feet. It comes with a deck and balcony with water views, a three-car garage, and swimming pool.

Local merchants were taking a subdued, wait-and-see approach in greeting to the news that the famous couple may make a home in Scituate.

A Matter of Taste owner Nancy Murray Young seemed pleased to hear the news, but wasn't working on a welcome basket just yet.

"I just heard about it this morning," said Young from her Front Street gourmet shop yesterday afternoon.

A lifelong resident of Scituate, Young said it's not unusual with Affleck's Boston roots that he'd choose to have a home in the scenic, seaside town. And she's hopeful if they move in to town, residents will find a way to welcome the high profile couple graciously while trying not to invade their space.

"It will be up to them to set the tone," Young said. "It would be nice for them to let us know how they want to be treated. And of course it would be lovely if they would shop locally," she quipped.

And what would she whip up in a welcome basket for the glam couple? "Well of course we'd include some of our private label products," with Scituate inspired names. "I've heard the house is off Gannett Road, so we'd include some of our Gannett Pasture Grape Jelly, and a pound of our new gourmet coffee line — the Irish Riviera Cream, I think."

To give them a hearty New England welcome, Young said the basket would also include clam chowder, some sort of cranberry product and the shop's famous "Scituate in the Sand" coffee mug which features a black and white photo of Scituate written in the sands of Minot Beach. To help Jen and Ben get around town, Young said she'd include a new Scituate Map, a street listing, a "Shop Scituate and Services Guide" and a Rotary phonebook."

"I hope if they do come, we can give them a wonderful welcome," she said.

Restaurant wants to remove ledge off site

DiNero's sues ZBA over bylaw

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The owner of DiNero's restaurant, Franklin Plotner, is suing the Zoning Board of Appeals, saying the town's bylaws allow him to remove ledge from his property in order to expand his establishment's parking lot.

Plotner's lawyer, Gregory Sullivan, says his client is exempt from the town's "earth removal" bylaw because of a clause that allows for all removal necessary to construct the new parking lot.

According to the bylaw, that exemption is granted only if "the quantity of the material removed does not exceed that actually displaced by the portion of the…road, [or] driveway…below finished grade."

Sullivan said the bylaw is intended to prevent people from digging mines or quarries on their property, not from building houses or, in his client's case, a parking lot.

However, the Zoning Board of Appeals has said Plotner does not qualify for the exemption.

Sullivan said Plotner will continue to hammer out ledge with the hope that he will eventually be able to remove it from the property. If he is not granted the exemption he seeks in court, Plotner would keep any displaced ledge on-site, which would be legal under the bylaw.

"There are a couple of different ways that can be effectuated," Sullivan said. "The problem is it's not as economical….But there are a number of different options that my client is considering for keeping the ledge on-site." Initial plans last fall showed that about 2,600 square feet of ledge would need to be displaced for the planned expansion of the DiNero's parking lot.

Plotner could not immediately say if those figures were still accurate. "All I know is that people have been removing ledge like this for years and I don't know why they're not letting me do it," he said.

Two weeks ago, after neighbors complained when construction workers started hammering out ledge on the DiNero's site, Town Manager Mark Haddad issued a cease and desist order relating to all earth removal on the property.

"All I know is that people have been removing ledge like this for years and I don't know why they're not letting me do it."
— Franklin Plotner, owner

Haddad consulted Town Counsel and was acting in place of Building Inspector Bob Egan, who was at a court proceeding. He said he felt that more earth material had been removed from the property than the 10 cubic yards allowed under the bylaws.

Later that same day, however, the cease and desist order was rescinded after Egan determined that the 10 cubic yard threshold was not reached.

The Zoning Board first informed Plotner that he was not exempt from the "earth removal" bylaw at a public hearing in September.

Plotner originally applied to the board for a special permit to expand the restaurant itself but was denied. The board said the addition would cause an increase in traffic congestion along busy Hull Street. It also stated the 26-foot-long extension of a wall that is only about 4-1/2 feet from the street would present a "significant danger to cars and pedestrians."

DiNero's currently doesn't meet the 15-foot minimum setback requirements and was seeking a special permit to "expand a preexisting non-conforming structure." The restaurant asked to add 1,242 square feet to the south of the existing building.

The Zoning Board did grant Plotner a variance to lay out a parking lot using parking spaces that are a foot shorter than required, but only on the condition that the ledge on the premises not be disturbed in any way.

The current parking lot at DiNero's has 36 spaces — more than the 31 needed [one for every three seats, under the bylaw], but the existing lot is congested because the spaces are undersized.

Plotner originally sought to expand the parking lot to accommodate 39 roomier spaces, or 48 spaces counting stacked valet parking on-site.

James Island homes opposed

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

There's a move afoot to save James Island, a peninsula off Atlantic Avenue in upper Little Harbor, from being developed.

A group of concerned citizens, dubbed the James Island Preservation Alliance, from the Little Harbor area are working with Cohasset Conservation Trust to preserve the peninsula as open space.

But current plans for the five-acre parcel include two new homes on two lots; and one of the lots is under agreement. The other lot is being offered at $1.25 million, according to local Realtor, Dean & Hamilton that is listing the property.

What might be good news for the preservationists is the fact the Board of Health denied the subdivision plan this week because it didn't include management of storm-water runoff. The denial could trigger a public hearing on the subdivision plan, which must also wend its way through the Planning Board and Conservation Commission process.

The citizens group asked the Board of Health to pay careful attention to the potential damage to the environment further development on the peninsula could cause to Little Harbor through lawn pesticides and fertilizers. The homes would also need septic systems because the roads around Little Harbor are not connected to the sewer.

John Hartshorne of the Cohasset Conservation Trust, a private group, said the organization was in discussions with the property owners about preserving the area as open space. He noted the site was a wildlife habitat — something the entire town has a stake in.

Tom Hamilton of Dean & Hamilton said offers on the remaining lot would be entertained from any citizen, organization or group.

Override passes and Sullivan wins

Incumbent Michael Sullivan was elected to serve what will be his fourth term on the Board of Selectmen. Sullivan received 959 votes, while challenger Roger Hill, in his second bid for selectman, had 719 votes. Gabriel Gomez, in his first try for any elected office in town, got 693 votes.

Sullivan said the override vote reflected how important it would be for town officials to be extremely careful about how they spent town money. "There's obviously a message there," he said. "We've got to be tight with expenses and stay within (Proposition) 2-1/2 the next few years and not go back to overrides."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said it would probably not be known until the summer whether more cuts might be necessary in the fiscal year 2004 budget. "As long as the Legislature doesn't go deeper than the Governor's budget, then we're okay," he said.

Haddad also maintained that no override would be necessary next fiscal year.

Sullivan was happy to have secured victory in what was the only competitive race of the election.

"It was a good campaign," he said. "A lot of people worked really hard to make it happen."

Sullivan's last bid for Selectman was also a three -way race for a single seat. It was not as close as this year's race.

"This was probably the most competitive race I've been in," he said.

Hill said he thinks some of his votes from his run for selectman last year may have been lost to Gomez, since both campaigned on the idea that a fresh perspective was needed in Town Hall. Perhaps the most influential supporter Hill lost to Gomez was Polly Logan, vice-chairwoman of the state's Republican Party.

Hill said that Saturday's results were by no means an overwhelming show of support for the status quo in Town Hall. "1,400 people voted against Michael Sullivan," he said.

Hill thanked his dedicated supporters. "A number of people went to bat for me," he said. "A lot of people put in a huge amount of effort."

Gomez said having one campaign under his belt has only made him hungry and better prepared for the next. "It was a great experience," he said. "I thought we did very well. I thought we had a chance to win the whole time. I'll be there next year for sure."

Gomez said the advice and support of Logan and other longtime residents and Republicans like Julie Guild helped his campaign. "It definitely helped, but I think my support is a lot broader than that," he said.

Gomez was excited to volunteer for a town committee while he awaits next year's election.

Sullivan disputed Hill's assessment of how votes may or may not have been split in the three-way race. "I think Gabriel took votes from me," he said. "I don't know if he took votes from Roger."

Gomez agreed with Sullivan. "I think I got a lot of votes from Sullivan," he said. "He had 1,400 votes the last time he was elected — the most that any selectman has ever gotten. This year, he only had 900 votes. Where do you think those votes went?"

Hill declined to say if he would run for elected office next year, when selectmen Merle Brown and Tom Callahan are up for reelection.

Antiques appraisals benefit local charity

It's time to rummage through the attic and dig through the closet to locate that old object you've always wondered about. A dusty painting, the Oriental rug brought back from Turkey, or the silver tea set handed down through five generations…whatever your treasures…you can have them appraised by experts.

An "Antiques Appraisal Day," to benefit the Mary-Martha Learning Center will be held Saturday, April 12 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at Plymouth River Elementary School, 200 High St., which is handicap-accessible.

Skinner, Inc., the appraisers seen on PBS's "Chubb's Antiques Roadshow" will be featured. Appraisal fees are $10 for one item, $20 for two items, and $5 for each additional item (coins, stamps and jewelry excluded).

The Mary-Martha Learning Center is a residential education program in Hingham that serves homeless families, primarily women with young children.

Attendees at the Antiques Appraisal Day will have the opportunity to meet one-on-one with a Skinner appraiser. Skinner is one of the nation's leading full service auctioneers and appraisers of antiques and fine art. The participating appraisers on April 12 will be Stuart Whitehurst, director of rare books/manuscripts and senior appraiser, and James Callahan, director of Asian works of art and general appraiser. Both have made numerous appearances on "Antiques Roadshow."

This fundraiser will allow the Mary-Martha Learning Center to become more familiar in the community and has been made possible through a corporate donation from Pyne Keohane Funeral Services of Hingham, which serves families in Hingham and Hull.

Avalon wastewater, financial impact top list

$270,000 of that. He said Avalon could end up costing the town $380,000 a year, resulting in a budget shortfall of almost $4 million over the next 10 years.

Michael Wescott, also speaking for Cohasset Action, said Avalon would make developing true affordable housing in Cohasset harder. Because it is a rental project, he said, the state would recognize all 200 units as affordable, even though only 20 to 25 percent of the units would actually be below market value. Consequently, the town would reach the 10 percent affordable housing mark, making it ineligible for future 40B projects. That, Wescott said, might cause the town lose sight of its larger need for affordable housing.

"We're afraid this project might take affordable housing off the plate if it were approved," he said.

Wescott said Avalon would create the biggest population increase the town has seen in 30 years, though he did not cite his source.

He said Cohasset Action's position was that the project should be denied outright, primarily because of its wastewater flaws. But if the project was approved for some reason, he said, it should be limited to 100 units, age-restricted to people over 55, stripped of 3-bedroom apartments and limited in size to leave room for commercial retail space.

Other residents repeated Wescott's suggestion that the development should be limited to senior housing if it is approved. Some said it should be restricted to people over age 65. Others said senior housing would be less of a financial burden on the town and would still help fill a void for much needed affordable units.

Chris Rodstram, a representative of the Trustees of Reservations, which owns land that abuts the proposed development site, said AvalonBay had approached the Trustees about putting a pipe across their land to solve any dispute over where wastewater flowed. The Trustees staff, Rodstram said, has recommended to its Board of Directors that permission be denied.

"It's fundamentally contrary to our mission to protect Whitney and Thayer Woods," he said.

Roger Hill of Highland Avenue, who owns the property where Atlantic Bagel is located, across from the proposed site, said he thought the development would cause too much traffic congestion on Route 3A. He also said he hoped any sidewalks planned did not go in front of his property because it would prevent him from being able to expand his parking lot under the bylaws.

Wayne Sawchuk of Beechwood Street said Avalon's driveway should be forced to adhere to the 6 percent grade that the bylaws require. He mentioned how this winter's snowfall has proven that is impossible to keep all the town's roads fully plowed at all times. "We don't want cars sliding into (Route) 3A because the grade is too steep," he said.

Some residents seemed surprised to learn that Avalon's plan reserves space for an additional 50 units, but Zoning Board Chairman Woody Chittick stressed that the construction of those units was not before the board at this time. Sawchuk later suggested that, if the development is approved, the extra land should be reserved for an office park.

Perhaps the most tense moment of the meeting came when one resident pressured Chittick to divulge what was discussed in a meeting two weeks ago of what has been called a "negotiating team," made up of town officials and Avalon representatives.

Water Commissioner John McNabb has filed a complaint with the Disrtict Attorney claiming the meeting, which was not posted, was in violation of the state's Open Meeting Law. Chittick denied that any deliberations had begun as to whether to accept or deny Avalon's application. He said the purpose of the meeting was only to highlight the biggest areas of concern in Avalon's plan.

In a moment of comic relief, Robert Goldman of Wheelwright Farm said the town's water already tasted bad enough and nothing more should be done to jeopardize it.

"In all my 81 years of drinking town and city water, Cohasset has the worst water I've ever had," he said. "And I do not want to see anything go into it that could make it any worse."

Dick Avery of 22 Surrey Drive was the only resident to bring up possible benefits of Avalon. He said it would give both seniors and young professionals an opportunity to live in town and it could make the town more diverse — religiously, racially, economically and age-wise.

But Avery said the biggest underlying problem was that Cohasset might not be able to afford Avalon because the town's commercial tax base, at 7 percent, is not big enough. Not to mention, he said, Avalon would be taking up commercially-zoned land.

Avery also suggested it was not impossible for Avalon to have a completely in-house water system where wastewater was converted back to drinking water standards and re-circulated. "How do you think John Glynn got his water?," he said, referring to astronauts that might have used similar systems.

AvalonBay representatives, however, did not seem receptive to the idea. "Should we put that one in our advertising brochure?" one of them joked.

Chittick said the meeting was helpful and he was impressed with some of the suggestions residents had brought to the table. He said the Zoning Board would reconvene on May 20, but it is unclear if that will be the last meeting in the public hearing.

AvalonBay's vice president of development Scott Dale said at the next meeting he and his colleagues will present a "comprehensive response" to the Zoning Board's most serious health, safety and environmental concerns surrounding the project—namely, its wastewater system, its lack of water pressure and its access road plan.

After AvalonBay presents its rebuttal, the Board of Selectmen will then go before the Zoning Board, though it is not yet known if that presentation would take place in an additional meeting. The Selectmen met Monday with the Zoning Board's counsel, Mark Brobowski, to discuss how they should go about taking a position on Avalon.

Some selectmen feel pressured by residents who say the board is welcoming the development, although it has not voiced any formal opinion. (See related story).

Selectmen forming opinion on Avalon

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Selectmen met Monday to decide what role they should play in the ongoing public hearing on AvalonBay's proposal for a 200-unit apartment complex. The board sought the advice of the Zoning Board's counsel, Mark Bobrowski.

"Our problem is...everybody says we're behind Avalon because we haven't said anything yet," said Selectman Merle Brown.

Bobrowski, who has had experience with other towns facing applications from developers under Chapter 40B, said the selectmen could chime in at any time during the public hearing, either individually or as a group.

He suggested they avoid getting involved in technical issues that they would not be qualified to handle. But issues of town finances, roadways, piping and overall policymaking were all within the Selectmen's jurisdiction, he said.

Selectman Tom Callahan said he did not necessarily agree with giving AvalonBay time to respond to problems in their initial plan. "You could take the position that they don't get a second bite of the apple," he said. "I'm concerned that we're letting Avalon fix these problems."

But Bobrowski said the application must examined to the fullest, especially so that, in the case of a denial, the decision would hold up when appealed to the state. "That's part in parcel of the 40B process," he said.

Bobrowski said in the history of Chapter 40B only 12 denials based on a project's merits were upheld by the state's Housing Appeals Committee. A project that was prematurely denied by a local Zoning Board could end up simply being remanded or, even worse, approved by the state in its original form, he said.

Callahan worried that the general public thought some town officials had secretly agreed to approve Avalon. "There's a notion out there that the is a preconceived plan to negotiate with Avalon," he said.

But Zoning Board Chairman Woody Chittick, also in attendance, stressed that no deliberations had begun. Also, he said, when they did begin, they would be open meetings, meaning the public could attend, but they would not be a public hearing, so residents would not necessarily be allowed to speak.

Callahan said the Selectmen deserve to have the last slot in the current hearing, something Bobrowski and Chittick did not see any problems with.

"I think this is the most important development facing the town, right now and for a long time to come, and I think we ought to have the final say in the hearing, even after Avalon gives their rebuttal," Callahan said.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the major reason the board has not taken a position yet was because it wanted to hear what other boards had to say first.

At the Selectmen's meeting Tuesday night, Selectmen discussed the issue further. Selectman Michael Sullivan, who was the only board member not in attendance at Monday's meeting, suggested that Town financial director Mike Buckley do a financial analysis of Avalon's impact on the town's operating budget.

Selectmen agreed to draft a preliminary position on Avalon by the end of April. The board might revisit that position after hearing AvalonBay's response to wastewater, water pressure and access road issues at the next meeting of the public hearing on May 20.

Open burning season is still underway

Cohasset residents may obtain permits on a daily basis from through May 1, for open burning. Permits may be obtained by calling the Fire Department Dispatch, Center at 781-383-0260 between the hours of 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Permits are valid for one day only.

Burning may be conducted during periods of good atmospheric ventilation and must not cause a nuisance. Adverse weather conditions (wind and drought) will impact permit issuance. Burning hours are from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on days permits are issued. Decisions to issue permits are made daily at 9 a.m. Persons calling for permits before that hour will be advised to call back.

Open burning permits are issued for the disposal of brush, cane, driftwood and forestry debris. Burning shall be conducted on land proximate to the place of generation. Burning shall be conducted at a distance greater than 75 feet from any dwelling. Select a safe area with no ground cover. While burning the fire must be attended until completely extinguished. Have a water hose rake and shovel nearby for fire control.

Honor a loved one with a luminaria at this year's Relay For Life

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

LUMINARIA OFFERED

By purchasing luminarias to honor cancer survivors or to remember those who are no longer with us, you can pay tribute to loved ones while creating a lighted path of hope to lead the Relay For Life walkers through the night. A luminaria is simply a candle placed in a wax paper bag bearing the name of a loved one. The candles are placed around the track and are lit in a ceremony during the Relay, (9 p.m. Friday, May 16). Luminaria bags can be purchased for $ 5 each at Sovereign Bank (Stop and Shop Plaza) 380 Route 3A, Mon. 9a.m.-4p.m., Tues. & Wed 9a.m.-3p.m., Thurs. & Fri. 9a.m.-5p.m. and Sat. 9a.m.-noon. Also at Pilgrim Co-op Bank of Cohasset (downtown) 48 South Main St., Mon., Tues., Wed., Fri. 8:30a.m.-4 p.m., Thurs. 8:30a.m.-6 p.m. and Sat 8:30a.m.-noon.

Volunteers for the event are needed on May 16 & 17. Anyone that is willing to give us an hour, two hours or more of their time would be appreciated. Call Laurie Livingstone Greenip at 781-383-6193 if you can help.

'SOUND OF MUSIC'

The Cohasset Dramatic Club is hard at practice for the terrific performances of the show, "The Sound Of Music". The talented actors are from all over the South Shore from Quincy to Duxbury and the play is directed by Jessica McDonald from Hull. Performances are May 2, 3, 9, 10, 16 & 17 at 7:30 p.m. and May 4, 11 & 18 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $12 and are available at Bottonwood Books and Springbrook Kids in Cohasset, Front Street Books in Scituate, at the door and by phone at 781-544-0304.

Girl Scout troops receive a $2 discount on advanced purchase tickets. Contact Barbara Baumgarten at 781-383-1834 for reservations.

CLEANUP CREW

Cohasset should be very proud of the Cub Scouts Den 5 led by leaders Jimmy Curley and Keith Moskow. This very ambitious bunch of boys recently went to Sandy Beach and collected several bags of trash to perform a community service in town. The boys who participated were: Ben Curley, Jake Moskow, Jeffrey Swain, Ben Pratt, Devon Dickson and David Williams. You all did a beautiful job in helping to keep one of Cohasset's treasures neat and clean!

OPEN HOUSE!

This Saturday, April 12, the Center for Student Coastal Research, will hold an open house and sign-up, from 9 a.m.-2 p.m. at 40 Parker Ave. for this summer's brand-new "Seaside Adventures" program! The center will be accepting applications on site and the summer program staff will be available to meet you and answer any questions. Check out some hands-on activities as well!! Come and find out more, as spaces are limited. Visit the center's website at www.ccscr.org or phone Karen Oronte (781-383-6737) or Susan Galligan (781-383-0765) with any questions. Hope to "SEA" you there!

LUNCHTIME SPEAKER

The Lunchtime Speaker Series continues on Friday, April 11 at noon at the South Shore Art Center. Nancy Ivas, nutritionist and author of "Healthy Homecooking From Nantucket," will present a discussion of health and wellness in relation to the changing seasons and changes in diet. Learn the importance of seasonal health and take home some simple, healthy recipes. Challenge your ideas about body image and diets. Eat well and Be Well! Free, all are welcome. For more info call the Cohasset Social Service League 781-383-0771.

SHADY CHARACTERS SOUGHT

The Cohasset Swim Center is getting ready to start building a shade structure to provide pool users with much needed protection from the sun and is looking for some "shady characters". The center needs your help. If you have some time to lend this spring, please consider joining in on this project. Building and/or engineering experience would be especially helpful, but all hands are welcome! Call 383-9463. The Swim Center is a non-profit organization that provides instruction and recreational opportunities to all members of the community.

ART IN BLOOM

Tina Watson, left, and Chris Sida of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset attend an orientation meeting at the Museum of Fine Arts to plan for Art in Bloom, in which garden clubs from across New England come together at the museum to showcase flower arranging as an art form. Art in Bloom runs from April 27-29.

BENEFIT WALK

In spite of the bad weather, Cohasset once again hosted one of last Saturday's Walks to benefit the National Multiple Sclerosis Society. According to Barbara Green, Captain of the 25 member "Green Team", a large percentage of the more than $20,000 raised by the team was from local private and corporate donors.

Local Green Team members who braved the elements to walk for the cause included; Dan Rattner, Diana Kinch, Paul and Hunter Forrer, Trish and Nate Morse, Dave and Ronnie McMorris, Diane Shipp, Woody and Joanne Chittick, and Rustam Devitre. What a great achievement for this wonderful team and group of people.

THAYER HONORS

Thayer Academy recently released a listing of students who achieved academic honors and several Cohasset students were recognized for these honors. Ninth grader Joseph M. Rosano, 10th grader Catherine M. Ernst and 11th grader Suzanne Marie Lewis all received honors, and Malcolm J. Stansell received high honors recognition. Congratulations to all of you on your hard work. Keep it up.

That is all for this week. I just wanted to remind everyone that somewhere in the future (I sincerely hope) is the promise of nicer weather and springtime fun. With that comes more and more outdoor activities and children riding bikes, walking and just plain being kids who are having fun. As we all drive around town, we need to make sure to be a little more cautious and slow down enough to be able to stop quick should the situation warrant it.

The other day as I was coming home from Hanover, a group of geese were crossing the road. Myself and several others came to a stop to let them pass. On the side of the road was a woman with three young children watching the geese. One of the cars that was behind me decided that he just didn't want to wait any longer and gunned past us all only to have one of the young children run from the woman into the street. Thank goodness this person was able to slam on the brakes in time as it was way to close for comfort. Sometimes, we have to stop and wait even if it is an inconvenience when it comes to children or animals or just plain life for that matter. Let's face it, a few extra minutes in time is not that much to give....

Going the distance for children at-risk

With the hint of spring in the air, one might think about getting out the running shoes. For the 10 volunteers who will run in the 107th Boston Marathon on April 21 to raise funds and awareness of the Robert F. Kennedy Children's Action Corps, the training started months ago in the cold of winter.

Stephen Pozatek of Cohasset and currently at Harvard Business School in Cambridge, is one of the volunteer runners.

The mission of the Robert F. Kennedy Children's Action Corps is to help at risk children, youth and their families realize their right to grow up in a happy, healthy and safe environment through direct services and advocacy. For more information, visit www.rfkchildren.org or call (617) 227-4183.

There Is an Alternative to Nursing Home Care

Families today are in search of much needed care for their senior family members. Yet, they know that the institutional environment of a nursing home that focuses on ailments and infirmities is not always a good choice. There is a better senior living alternative—Sunrise Assisted Living.

Here, in a beautiful homelike setting, residents enjoy supportive health care for all the realities of advanced age and the promise of new friendships, too. Sunrise is a positive and lively senior living option, where quality of life is as great a priority as good physical care. And... Sunrise is significantly less expensive than a nursing home. A truly better value and a better life.

Lecture on sailing adventure benefits local research center

The Cohasset Yacht Club will continue its tradition of support for maritime activities by sponsoring a lecture on Saturday April 12 at 7 p.m. The speakers for this event will be CYC members Martha and Dana Robes who will present a program on their recently concluded five-year, around-the-world cruise on their Little Harbor 48, Sarah Jane.

During their voyage, the Robes logged more than 40,000 miles sailing west to east. This lecture will focus on a portion of the trip covering roughly the first two years. During this time, the Robeses traveled from Florida to Australia, spanning the South Pacific with stops in such exotic locales as the Friendly Islands (Tonga, Vava'u and Ha'apai), French Polynesia, and New Zealand.

Proceeds from the talk will go to the Cohasset High School Summer Institute's Center for Student Coastal Research.

The lecture will be held at St. Anthony's Parish Center and reservations are encouraged. The cost is $12 per person for prepaid reservations, and $15 at the door (students free). Please make checks payable to the Cohasset Yacht Club. The lecture is open to the public. Details can be obtained and reservations made by calling Steve Bobo at (781) 383-9280.

Open house at student center

This Saturday, April 12, the Center for Student Coastal Research, will hold an open house and sign-up, for the summer's brand-new "Seaside Adventures" program at 40 Parker Ave., from 9a.m.-2p.m. Applications will be available and the summer program staff will answer any questions. Be sure to heck out the hands-on activities as well Visit the website at www.ccscr.org or phone Karen Oronte (781-383-6737) or Susan Galligan (781-383-0765) with any questions

Choral music for Holy Week

The 22 women of the Broad Cove Chorale, directed by Margo Euler, are preparing two diverse settings of the powerful Passion text in April: a short a cappella showpiece by the 20th-century Dutch composer Henk Badings, and the beautiful Baroque masterpiece by Giovanni Pergolesi. Two lush motets by the Romantic German composer Josef Rheinberger will round out the concert.

The "Stabat Mater" of Pergolesi was written in1736, in the last year of the famous composer's short life, specifically for the Good Friday service at a Naples church. Comprised of many short stanzas, the music is shared between the full chorus, a chamber choir, and several solo voices, allowing the audience to hear the Chorale musicians in many groupings.

The formal concert takes place Palm Sunday, April 13 at 4 p.m., at House of Prayer, 916 Main St. in Hingham (tickets $10 at the door). A Good Friday performance will be sung at Hingham Congregational Church (378 Main St.) on April 18 at 8 p.m. (free will offering). In between, there will be a free concert for Seniors on Wed. April 16 at Hingham Congregational Church at 10 am.

Dozens of cancer survivors walk around the track for the Survivors' lap during last year's Cohasset Relay For Life. This year, the Cohasset Relay hopes to raise $146,000 for the American Cancer Society.

Relay seeks to boost participation

Cancer fundraiser set for May 17-18

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The American Cancer Society's Relay for Life is returning to Cohasset and organizers hope this year's event will be bigger and better than the last.

Last year, relays in approximately 3,300 communities nationwide raised more than $245 million to help fund the society's fight against cancer.

In Cohasset alone, about $140,000 was raised by some 600 walkers. Fifty-five local cancer survivors were honored and 30 teams participated.

The relay takes the form of an all-night, tag-team trek around the Cohasset High School track. Teams and individuals arrange for sponsorship, and prizes are awarded to the highest fundraising individual, the top fundraising team, the most spirited team and the best decorated campsite.

Event chair Laurie Greenip said organizers this year are shooting for at least 40, eight-member teams to participate. They're hoping to recognize some 70 cancer survivors and raise $146,000 for the American Cancer Society.

"It is like one big family getting together and pulling for each other."
— Victor Van der Lugt of "Hub Healers"

High School senior Ross Lieb-Lappen has participated in the Relay for Life each year since the event first came to Cohasset in 1997. In 1998, he formed his own team, the "Cancer Killers," and last year he volunteered on the event planning committee.

Lieb-Lappen said his friends from Scituate were almost driven to tears when they realized they could not participate last year because the event was the same night as their high school prom.

He encouraged first-time participants to come between 6 and 9 p.m. on the Friday night of the relay. That way, if they were intimidated by the length of the event, they would at least catch the cancer survivor's lap and the luminaria ceremony, where candles are light to honor those who have suffered from the disease.

"Last year we spelled 'HOPE' with luminarias in the bleachers," Lieb-Lappen said. "That word comes the closest to describing the relay…There is nothing I have experienced that moves you so much."

Victor Van der Lugt has participated in the relay for five years as a member of his team, the "Hub Healers." He said he got involved because he wanted to give back to the community.

"Once you get involved, it no longer feels like an effort," he said. "People thank you for helping but it's just as gratifying to me as it is to those that are benefiting from it."

Van der Lugt described the event as a spiritual experience. "There's a certain calming feeling when you are on the track," he said. "It is like one big family getting together and pulling for each other."

Last year's event was cut short due to torrential downpours but, as Van der Lugt recalled, one couple was not impeded by the elements.

"I drove by at about 1 p.m. and the place was empty except for a lady and a gentleman still walking around the track holding an umbrella that was not protecting them at all from the driving wind and rain," he said.

"I later found out that both of them had been touched recently by someone that had cancer, and they were determined to continue walking until the event was officially over."

This year's Relay for Life is scheduled to begin at 3 p.m. on Friday, May 16 and end at 12 p.m. on Saturday, May 17. For more information or to find out how to participate, please contact event chair Laurie Greenip at 781-383-6193.

The neighbors want seagulls to go

After neighbors complained, the board sent the Tillotsons a letter asking them not to feed seagulls stating that attracting the birds to a neighborhood can cause a public nuisance. It's also makes the birds dependant on human handouts, the letter stated.

"If you are feeding these birds, please stop immediately, not only for the birds' sake but for you and your neighbors as well," Health Agent Joseph Godzik wrote back in October. After another complaint, on Feb. 6 at about 4 p.m., Godzik made a site visit and didn't see any evidence of the gulls, except for some flying quite high overhead.

While Mrs. Tillotson says she has stopped the practice, the neighbors who wrote two more letters and have now presented the health board with a video — say she hasn't.

The video that was filmed on March 25 and 26, shows a woman, who is reportedly Cynthia Tillotson, carrying a bucket as dozens of seagulls fly through her yard. The video, which was shot through the woods from a neighboring home, also shows the seagulls gathering atop the Tillotsons' house before they swoop down into the yard for the food.

According to Dan Volungis, 234 Forest Ave., and Meredith Hayes, 13 Surry Drive, the feedings are taking place three times a day at 7:15 a.m., 12:15 p.m. and 4:15 p.m.

Health board chairman Steve Bobo said having Tillotsons in for a hearing on the matter would provide the board the opportunity to explain the potential harm that feeding the seagulls can cause. Board member Margaret Chapman said the board could decide to levy fines if the practice continues.

But Mrs. Tillotson says that won't be necessary because she is not feeding the seagulls.

"They see me refilling my bird feeders and go crazy," she said.

Tillotson said it all started when she and her husband fed just one seagull they nicknamed "Jonathan Livingston Seagull" who kept coming back. "Then he brought his aunts, uncles and cousins and everybody else," she said.

Tillotson said she is optimistic that when warmer weather comes, the seagulls will find plenty of fish and other food and will leave her yard alone.

She also denies feeding squirrels but says they like the sunflower seeds in her bird feeders. The neighbors also allege squirrels have taken peanuts from the Tillotsons' yard and buried them under bushes in their yards to later retrieve them, hurting the shrubs. Large beef bones left for animals have also made their way into neighboring yards, the neighbors said.

Buttonwood hosts coffee with authors

Buttonwood Books and Toys in Cohasset will present "Coffee With The Authors" on Tuesday, April 29 at the Atlantica Restaurant in Cohasset from 9:45 to 11:30 a.m. Enjoy a continental breakfast and a stimulating morning with three authors as they discuss the art of writing and their latest works.

Featured authors will be Rosemary Mahoney for "The Singular Pilgrim: Travels on Sacred Ground", Jacquelyn Mitchard for "Twelve Times Blessed" and Jessica Shattuck for "The Hazards of Good Breeding". Mahoney's book is a collection of travel essays that chronicle her journey along ancient paths traveled by ancient pilgrims. Her previous works include "Whoredom in Kimmage" and "A Likely Story: One Summer with Lillian Hellman".

Mitchard, author of "The Deep End of the Ocean", the book selected by Oprah Winfrey to launch her book club, sets her latest novel on Cape Cod and traces the dynamics of family change within a single year.

"The Hazards of Good Breeding" by Shattuck is the debut novel from a new and innovative novelist. Shattuck weaves with great skill the tale of a family on the brink of change with thoughtful insight and humor. Advance reservations and ticketing are required and can be made by calling Buttonwood at 781-383-2665. Tickets are $13 per person, non-refundable.

Kitchen Tour

Though ticket sales for the South Shore Community Center's "Kitchen Tour" have been brisk, a limited number remain for this designer tour of some of the most unique kitchens in Cohasset. The tour will be held on Friday, May 2 from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. and is the seventh year the center has sponsored the Kitchen Tour—this year's homes and samplings from local caterers promise to be some of the most spectacular to date.

Tickets are $25 (while available) and may be purchased at the center or by calling them at 781-383-0088. Funds from the 2003 Kitchen Tour will be used to support the programs of the South Shore Community Center.

For more information about this event, or for a schedule of the community center's courses, call 781-383-0088.

Village streetscape hearing is Tuesday and the Waterfield Design Group, the engineering firm contracted by the town to design the streetscape project.

The issues also came up at a Planning Board meeting last week, where Chairman Al Moore and member Peter Pratt said they had essentially been left out of the loop in regards to the project.

Lisa Bailey, Waterfield's senior landscape architect, met with the Planning Board last Wednesday to review designs for the streetscape project that are 75 percent completed. Moore seemed surprised when Bailey asked for the board's suggestions so the designs could be completed in two weeks.

"This board has been left out of this completely," he said after reviewing the drawings. "We've had no input on this up until now."

"(The Slectmen have) completely usurped our legal rights," said Pratt.

Of particular concern to the Planning Board were the parking spaces in the design, which Waterfield has made 8 feet 6 inches wide, one foot narrower than what the town's bylaws require.

Also, some Planning Board members were bothered by plans for "bumpouts"— areas where sidewalks have been enlarged to accommodate for crosswalks, but often at the expense of parking spaces. The bumpouts have also been opposed by many village merchants, who say parking is more important than improved pedestrian access.

The most controversial bumpout in current designs extends from the sidewalk in front of Tedeschi's to a crosswalk that aligns with a footpath to the town parking lot. Moore said the bumpout was unnecessary. "I see it that parking trumps," he said. "Two parking spots are worth more than the crossing."

But Planning Board members Chris Ford and Bill Good disagreed. Ford said the connection to the town parking lot made sense, and Good said the bumpout was "a safety issue and...a visibility issue."

It may have been the first time the Planning Board debated the issue, but it was the same debate that has played out at almost every meeting on the streetscape improvement project since the first public hearing in January. In the battle of parking vs. pedestrian access, who wins?

Even Selectmen, who are the overall authority on the streetscape improvement project, have disagreed on the issue. At their meeting Tuesday night, some said the project was intended all along to improve pedestrian access. Others held out, however, saying that the need for parking could be met at the same time.

Timetable

The streetscape improvement project has seen its timetable change several times over the past two months.

Selectmen had initially agreed to put the project out to bid by mid-March, but they postponed the bid date to April 30 after deciding to appoint two merchants to the existing Downtown Revitalization Task Force to help resolve any outstanding issues.

But the 6-month delay of construction on the Greenbush commuter line threw a temporary kink in the streetscape project. At first, Town Manager Mark Haddad told Waterfield officials to put the entire project on hold. He worried that Selectmen could decide to spend the state grant that will fund the project differently, particularly if Greenbush was abandoned and the town's mitigation agreement with the MBTA — which would pay for improvements to the town parking lot and the James Brook culvert — was nullified.

Then, two weeks ago, Haddad started the streetscape project up again with the goal of going to bid by mid-May. The decision came after Selectman Merle Brown suggested that waiting any longer would necessitate an extension on the state grant, which has already been extended once for a year until June 30, 2004. It was a risk Selectmen did not want to take.

Selectmen have now abandoned plans to add any merchants to the task force. Instead, they hope to hammer out any issues at their meeting next week.

At that meeting, Selectmen will need to decide if they should spend an additional $5,200 to investigate overhead wiring alternatives such as rerouting telephone wire behind Elm Street or behind South Main Street through the town parking lot.

Selectmen will also need to figure out if enough funding exists to extend a sidewalk to the old Paul Pratt Memorial Library, perhaps by shifting funds that might already be allocated for the sidewalk in front of the Red Lion Inn, whose owner, Gerd Ordelheide, agreed to pay for his own sidewalk improvements as part of a site plan review two years ago.

Finally, Selectmen will need to decide on the final angle on parking spaces along South Main Street, which Planning Board member Good pointed out as potentially dangerous at this Tuesday's Selectmen's meeting. He said cars backing out of spaces that are designed at a wider angle, as current designs show, could need to back into the oncoming lane to get out of a spot.

At the beginning of the meeting, Good jokingly introduced himself to Karen Fitzgerald of Waterfield as "one of the friendly ones on the Planning Board."

He admitted to Selectmen that "the board was steaming mad" at some points during its meeting last week. On whether the Planning Board being left out of the streetscape project, he said: "I didn't feel that personally. I felt that, hey, we've known Waterfield has been around for a while."

Haddad said he had given the 75 percent completed plans to the Planning Board a month and a half ago.

Operation Support Troops

Operation Iraqi Freedom (Iraq)
Operation Enduring Freedom (Afghanistan).
Operation Joint Guardian (Kosovo)
Operation Joint Forge (Bosnia-Herzegovina)
Operation Noble Eagle (Homeland security)

In wartime, the sacrifices that our young men and women in uniform make become so much more evident. Every day that they are in harm's way our hearts and prayers go out to them and their families.

But as you can see from the partial list above, there are tens of thousands of Americans voluntarily serving around the world, and they likely will continue to do so for the foreseeable future. American troops that now number some 35,700 have been protecting the Republic of Korea for 50 years.

And here at home, in Operation Noble Eagle – the Air Force, Air Force Reserve and Air National Guard — have flown nearly 30,000 warning sorties during the past 16 months. And the Coast Guard has increased armed boardings, escorts and patrols. Army National Guard units have provided stepped up security at airports.

Since the war in Iraq began, many of us want to engage in the worthy exercise of showing our support for the troops in any way we can, from rallies and yellow ribbons to letters, postcards and care packages. We can't even imagine what it must feel like to be curled up in a foxhole in a desert halfway around the world, wishing for any word from home. Regardless of our individual views on the armed conflict – we see a face like that of 19-year-old Army Pfc. Jessica Lynch (who looks younger than many high school students) and we want to protect our troops, tell them to please be safe and that we love them no matter what.

While the military offers some perks to its troops such as subsidized housing and money for college, it is also no secret that military pay is low and families can face financial hardship during long separations.

So how can we show our support?

Due to the constant threat of terrorism, it is unsafe for the military to accept unsolicited letters of support and care packages to "any service member." According to the Department of Defense, while legitimate mail from family members and loved ones is always encouraged, unsolicited mail raises security issues.

But here's how we can help:

• Operation USO Care Package — Care packages that contain an assortment of items the military has specifically requested, such as prepaid international calling cards; disposable cameras; toiletries and sunscreen. Individuals may donate $25 toward the sponsorship of a USO care package. Call 866-USO-GIVE for more information or visit: www.uso.org

• Operation Uplink — a program that keeps military and hospitalized veterans in touch with their families by providing free phone cards. Call 800-479-5228 or visit: www.operationuplink.org

• Give blood through the American Red Cross to make sure the safest possible blood is readily available whenever and where ever needed — for the military, for other blood centers in America and for all 5,000 American hospitals. To find out where you can donate call 1-800-GIVE-LIFE.

• Commissary gift certificates — give the gift of groceries for military families. Call 1-877-770-4438 to order by phone or visit: www.certifichecks.com

• The National Military Family Association, Inc., an organization dedicated to identifying and resolving the issues of greatest concern to military families' well being. To donate call 703-931-6632 or visit: www.nmfa.org

• TAPS (Tragedy Assistance Program for Survivors, Inc.), provides services to whose who have lost a loved one while serving in the Armed Forces, including a military survivor peer network, grief counseling, case worker assistance and crisis information. To donate call 1-800-959-TAPS or visit www.taps.org

MCAS and pupil pressure

TO THE EDITOR:

It's MCAS time again, and frankly I am confused. The MCAS is supposedly making our schools better, but this doesn't seem to be what I see. The amount of stress connected with educating children seems to have increased greatly since the inception of the MCAS.

The MCAS, which some educators believe is not developmentally appropriate for a large percentage of children in the elementary grades, is now dictating the curriculum. Teachers are required to maintain a breakneck pace of instruction so their students will be ready to take these difficult tests. The pace of teaching has become so frantic that many young children are complaining about stress. The number of children who presently must take various medications just to get through their school day is outrageous.

Does this increase in the level of stress, drive to prepare children to achieve in ways that may not be developmentally appropriate, and the designing of curriculum around a test make our schools better?

It seems to me that quality education is characterized by small class sizes with differentiated instruction for different learning styles and skilled teacher intervention to help individual struggling students. The MCAS does not provide this. On the contrary, every school in the Commonwealth must devote hundreds of hours of work preparing for the MCAS administratively: holding meetings, attending trainings, doing paperwork, administering the tests, and carefully packing up and shipping the tests away to be scored.

These hours of labor, and the expense that accompanies them, contribute nothing to the differentiation of instruction for individual learners - in fact, it takes dollars away from providing appropriate and meaningful interventions that help children. This expenditure exists in spite of proposed budget cuts - which will inevitably result in increased class sizes and reductions in adult staff, who might have helped struggling students.

I feel sad that my son is growing up in a the time when educational practice requires teachers to force many children to perform above their level of cognitive maturation, and supports the belief that it's more important to be frantically driven to achieve than to be emotionally balanced and to be smart than to be wise.

Hill thanks supporters

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing this to all the people that helped me on my bid for the seat in the selectmen's office, I couldn't have done it without you. I'm sorry that I was not successful, but it was a great race. Congratulations to Mike, you ran a good campaign.

I also need to thank the great group of people that spent countless hours working very hard trying to get me elected. I have met some people that I will consider my close friends for a long tine to come. It amazed me how hard they worked, and some of these people I had never met before. Last but not least to my wife and family that let me turn our house into campaign central for the month of March. This goes out to all 719 people who cast their ballot in my direction. Thank you all very much.

Sullivan says thanks to all

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of myself and my family I would like to thank everyone who worked so diligently to help in my reelection campaign. The campaign was very competitive requiring a major commitment on the part of many people to bring out the votes necessary to win.

Each candidate put together a hard working dedicated team motivated to protect the great qualities of Cohasset. I will work hard over the next three years to control finances, provide a quality education, and protect the finer qualities of the community.

To all the voters who voted for me I appreciate your support.

To all the voters of Cohasset I am always willing to assist when I can, so feel free to call me if the need arises.

Thank you,

Chamber poll on Greenbush disputed

TO THE EDITOR:

In the article in last week's paper, "Survey: Keep train on track," it was stated that the South Shore Chamber of Commerce poll indicated that "two-thirds of the residents along the corridor want the train." It is noteworthy that this corridor included Hull, Marshfield and Norwell, towns that would benefit greatly from Greenbush without suffering any of the negative impacts. If only the poll had been conducted in the "real" Greenbush corridor it might have been more relevant.

The residents along this corridor are far from a small minority. More than 2,800 homes are directly affected, an extraordinarily high number for only 17 miles of track. It is this group that should have more to say about the project than a random selection of 450 residents, most of whom live well away from the corridor and would suffer little or no impact if Greenbush were built. It is not their kids who would be walking the tracks and challenging the crossings. They wouldn't have to breathe the diesel fumes and experience the noise and vibration that accompany rail lines through densely populated areas.

In the article, the Chamber's president implies that the opposition is more concerned about spotted turtles than it is about people. The people he is no doubt referring to are those who would sit in air-conditioned comfort, reading their newspapers on their way to work through neighborhoods in which other people live. The question is, which people are more important? One has to wonder if the Chamber's leadership actually speaks for the majority of Chamber members in its attempts to downplay the legitimate concerns of the over 8,000 opponents who have signed petitions against Greenbush over the years. Indeed many Chamber members in the Greenbush corridor have left the organization because of its Greenbush position.

Although the Chamber poll claims that those polled considered Greenbush to be the best "alternative," it made no attempt to explain what the alternatives to Greenbush are. In addition to Greenbush-related questions, the poll could have easily asked residents if they would like to see, among other things: increased parking capacity at the Red Line facilities in Braintree and Quincy Adams and the Hingham commuter boat; a connector road from Route 3 through the Weymouth Naval Air Station development to the Old Colony commuter rail line in South Weymouth, or a feeder bus system from their communities to the Hingham commuter boat with bus service throughout Boston on the other end. Had this been done, the vast majority of those polled would in many cases have said "yes" to each point and in numbers that would have exceeded the 64 percent for Greenbush. It's common sense to build on systems that already exist. But this was not done, no doubt because the aforementioned are seen by the Chamber's leadership as "competition" to Greenbush. In this respect, the Chamber poll was a little like conducting a political poll with only one candidate running for office.

Chamber leadership claims that Greenbush would bring economic prosperity to the coastal communities of the South Shore are equally disingenuous. By economic prosperity do they mean that commuter rail access will encourage more people to live here, thus causing among other things: increased real estate taxes that will result from increased real estate values; the loss of more and more green space as landowners succumb to the temptation of higher real estate prices; the need for more services such as gas stations, restaurants and strip malls? If this is their idea of economic development, then let them run a poll and ask residents if this is a price they are willing to pay for Greenbush.

One suspects the leadership's real goal is to increase the Chamber's membership as well as bring more prosperity to its present members through the growth of commercial enterprises that would follow in the wake of Greenbush. This may be an admirable goal for businessmen, but not when it comes at the expense of the quality of life of so many South Shore residents.

On the subject of economics, how does the Chamber justify Greenbush's astronomical $270,000 cost per new rush hour rider, a figure that is three times higher than any other MBTA commuter rail project, at a time when state transportation authorities are wrestling with a deteriorating fiscal situation at the MBTA? The Chamber might also consider questioning the wisdom of design/build for a project such as Greenbush. Its contention that the cost has gone up due to delays caused by the opposition is unfounded. These delays have resulted in a tiny fraction of the increased cost. The cost has gone up mainly because the MBTA is only now finding out the real Greenbush price tag "as it designs the project." And given that Greenbush is the first project of this complexity to be built with the design/build concept, the final price tag is anyone's guess. If the members of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce ran their businesses with this kind of fiscal disconnect, they would be out of business in the blink of an eye and they wouldn't need a poll to figure out why.

HEALTH NOTES

Public Health Week — How's Cohasset doing?

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

This week has been declared "National Public Health Week" which, the letter says, will focus on five areas in which communities can work together to tackle the weight problem.

These include: 1)increasing physical fitness opportunities for kids. 2) promoting healthier living through better community design; 3) offering better opportunities for fitness and healthy eating in the workplace; 4) serving up more nutritious options in schools: and 5) providing healthy dining options in local restaurants and markets.

It's probably appropriate to keep score on Cohasset's performance against these goals. The Board has spent considerable time on items 2 through 5 with initiatives related to pedestrian access, sidewalks, etc., and monitoring and commenting on school diet, various restaurant inspections, and many others, but we've failed to include one of the Town's most important resources for health and physical fitness: John "Jack" Worley.

Jack is doing way more than most of us realize to make Cohasset a healthy town.

For 27 years, Jack has been the town's Recreation Department director, and one of the town's hardest working employees. If one talks to him, he emphasizes the recreation aspects of his work on such programs as arts and crafts and cooking and he looks on the fitness aspects as only a part of the job. That may be true, but from the health standpoint, and particularly in these days of fighting overweight and developing healthy life styles, Jack is doing way more than most of us realize to make Cohasset a healthy town. His programs for the young, 3-1/2 and older, and for adults (step aerobics), and his sports programs covering lacrosse, basketball, baseball, soccer, and for the real jocks, summer speed and endurance training, all promote healthy activity with the primary emphasis on fun. Hats off to Jack Worley!

Walking

Oh, and speaking of healthy pursuits, the Elder Affairs/Board of Health sponsored walking club is off to a good start. The walkers are now using the high school because of the terrible weather we've been having, but as soon as we get even a small break in the weather, they will transfer their walking outside. Since we would like to encourage both leisurely walkers and those with more vigorous aspirations, the high school will be available for inclement weather walking, and for those whose time or abilities are limited, special arrangements can be made.. There is always room for more with this congenial group. If you want additional information, call Joe McElroy at 781-383-0505.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

Deer Hill principal praised, thanked

TO THE EDITOR:

It is with great regret that many of us have recently learned that Paul Callahan's contract will not be renewed as principal of the Deer Hill School. Cohasset's loss will be someone else's gain.

While on the Cohasset School Committee, Paul consistently demonstrated his commitment, incredible work ethic and skills as an educator and administrator. In my view, Paul led the drive to bring Cohasset schools into the age of computer technology. He was always a strong advocate for the Deer Hill School, but a team player when it came to making painful budget decisions.

On numerous occasions, he personally inconvenienced himself to make the Deer Hill school facilities available to community service groups.

When the State of Massachusetts legislated school reform in 1993, it shifted the hiring decisions of principals and a few other key positions from school committees to superintendents. This small group of educators has no job security while others remain overly protected by entrenched unions.

I hope Paul and others like him get good severance packages because that should "go with the turf" of serving at the pleasure of a single supervisor.

Generals don't just fade away

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

It was General Douglas MacArthur, when he left the Army under duress in 1951 after a 52-year career, who popularized the phrase:

"Old soldiers never die; they just fade away."

That's not true anymore, Doug.

They never die but neither do they fade away; they show up on CNN and the other TV networks, analyzing critically for us civilians the military acumen of their successors.

Since we have been at war almost constantly since 1941, there's no shortage of them either.

At any moment I expect Gen. Wesley Clark (U.S. Army, ret.), the former supreme commander of NATO, to break out the chalk and draw Xs and Os like John Madden does for football.

Landing Clark as an analyst was a coup for CNN, although it was MSNBC that signed the true star, the A Rod of retired generals, Norman Schwarzkopf (U.S. Army, ret.) of Desert Storm fame. Clark is frequently critical of the Pentagon, a move which leads many to believe that he, like another former Supreme Allied Commander named Eisenhower, is running for president but as a Democrat. NBC has Gen. Barry McCaffrey (U.S. Army, ret.), chief of the Armed Forces Southern Command in Desert Storm, who is also critical of the conduct of the war.

But he also served a term as President Clinton's drug czar, so no one is really listening to him.

The comparison of the retired general as analyst to the retired (or fired) football coach is apt.

Let a pro football coach be relieved of his job and the TV networks are lined up outside his door, waving six-figure contracts at him for an occasional weekend of work behind the mike.

The college education of a star athlete now includes a major in football and a minor in broadcasting, just in case.

Let President Bush exchange angry words with the ayatollah or the mullah of some far off land and the TV producers start thumbing through their Rolodexes for unemployed generals.

Even as we speak, I'll bet that one of the TV networks has its eye on Gen. Tommy Franks to provide the analysis for the next war.

The analysts don't have to be generals, either.

CBS used Col. Mitch Mitchell (U.S. Army, ret.) as a headline analyst until Gen. Joseph Ralston, another Supreme Allied Commander for NATO, retired in March and brought up-to-speed expertise to the air.

Fox has Gen. Thomas McInerney (U.S. Air Force, ret.), a strong advocate of bombing 'em back to the Stone Age and letting the grunts on the ground mop up.

Fox also has Col. Oliver North (U.S. Marine Corps., ret) of Iran contra fame, but he is a full time Fox staffer and doesn't really count as an analyst.

Even local TV channels and radio stations, too, have analysts of their own, although they tend to be majors and captains as the budget will allow.

I wouldn't be surprised if there wasn't a small five-watt radio station somewhere in this land of ours that has a private first class on call to explain the Coalition's latest move on Baghdad

Why we should support our troops, support America

COMMENTARY

CHUCK MORSE

The following remarks were made by Chuck Morse at Saturday's rally at the VFW post in Hull to support the 1058th Transportation Company out of Hingham and other troops on active duty.

I'm honored to be standing here today alongside true American patriots. We are here today because we understand the nature of freedom and we understand what's at stake both here and around the world. On July 4th, 1776, our forefathers declared independence from the British tyrant George III. It should be noted that the majority of Americans at the time did not support those patriots. Most Americans back then were either loyal to the tyrant or were sitting on the fence waiting to see which way the wind would blow. Once the tide turned, and General George Washington's Continental Army began to stack up victories, Americans found themselves suddenly gripped with a patriotic fervor as they rallied around the flag.

The same psychology applies today both here and around the world. When American forces, along with those of the coalition of the willing, begin to turn the corner and win this war against the tyrant Saddam Hussein and the radical Islamists he represents, the freedom loving peoples of the Middle East and the rest of the world will also rally around the flag of freedom. Freedom can be a contagious thing when vigorously defended.

Freedom, however, does not grow on trees, it must be asserted in order prosper and sometimes, tragically, that form of assertion may, as a last resort, mean going to war against those who threaten it. Today, our brave and heroic men and women in uniform are doing just that, they are securing a future of freedom for a people who live in a far off land, a people who are being crushed under the oppressive weight of Saddam Hussein's Islamo-fascist tyranny. Our heroic men and women in uniform are removing a threat to freedom everywhere, a threat that made itself known on our own shores on Sept. 11, 2001.

Since World War II, heroic American men in uniform have suffered and died defending small nations such as South Korea and South Vietnam from the imperialistic and brutal advances of international communism. Our nation has supported freedom fighters and insurgents trying to throw off the brutal yoke of communism in their homelands. We can take great satisfaction in knowing that our selfless efforts finally bore fruit with the collapse of the communist behemoth in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. Millions of people were finally freed from the physical poverty and hunger as well as the spiritual and physical slavery and immorality of left-wing communism. Communism finally imploded on its own rot and was at long last relegated, along with its Nazi socialist counterpart, to the dust-bin of history.

Today the free world confronts a radical Islamic aggression, an aggression that represents a continuation of the oldest and most long-standing political and religious conspiracy, a conspiracy to subdue the world by force. Radical Islam, by nature, refuses to tolerate the existence of a non-Muslim world and the Radical Muslim feels commanded to engage in a perpetual bloody war or Jihad against the rest of the world until the rest of the world submits to its will. Thank God the vast majority of Muslims today do not follow these strictures of their faith. America and the free world rolls out the welcome mat to Muslim nations and peoples who want to live in peace. The free world welcomes Muslims who respect the independence and sovereignty of nations, the diversity of nations, and the natural laws of man.

But those who engage in Jihad must be utterly crushed if there is to be a future of freedom. The dastardly attack of Sept. 11, 2001, was a wholesale annihilation of over 3,000 of our fellow citizens, our friends and neighbors, mothers, fathers, grandparents, children, crueily murdered, cut down in the prime of their lives, simply because they, like all of us standing here, had the effrontery to live and be free in the non-Muslim world. That was the view of the 9/11 hijackers and that is the view of the radical Islamists today. For the first time, the ancient and evil force of Jihad struck us right in the solar plexus of the western hemisphere.

For over a millennia, much of the rest of the world has known the cruel sword of Jihad. The difference between the old days, when Jihadists could slaughter millions of indigenous Christians in the Middle East and North Africa, slaughtered over hundreds of years in what can only be described as a slow motion low tech Holocaust against Christians, and today, [illegible] Jihadists are playing with weapons of mass destruction, weapons that can and will use against us if they get the chance, weapons that can do the job in the blink of an eye.

The cause of freedom is a cause worth supporting. Only through freedom are individuals free to live according to a moral code. The best example of a free society is that our own God blessed Republic. We are once again embroiled in a World War against an authoritarian conspiracy, a conspiracy to deprive us and others of freedom. Lets hope and pray, that like past generations, we have the moral underpinnings, the courage, and the clarity regarding what's at stake to rise to the challenge. This enemy must once again be met on the field of battle if freedom is to endure; if we fall short our future will indeed be perilous.

Romney softens on gambling; as many come off Medicaid rolls

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Beacon Hill's been through weeks of theoretical debate, tut-tutting and pooh-poohing about Gov. Romney's government restructuring plan. That's all been rhetorical, but there was nothing abstract about what happened to 36,000 low-income people in Massachusetts: they lost their government health insurance and nearly all will no have no way to pay for care.

This development rested uncomfortably alongside a sudden shift in strategy by the administration on casinos. Looking urgently for cash from any available source to help balance next year's budget, the Romney team surprised the state by announcing it would be open to locating new venues for legal gambling in Massachusetts. The two items seem disparate at first, but they're not. Nationwide, state governments rake in hundreds of millions by collecting a piece of the action from betting parlors. Connecticut state government's expecting to collect $400 million this year from its two casinos. Applied to Massachusetts, that money would solve more than 10 percent of this year's budget deficit.

So Robert Pozen, the governor's chief economic aide, said the administration would support legislation allowing 7,200 slot machines here. They'd be video slots, spread amongst three parlors. The administration says the parlors would get five-year licenses, providing a mechanism for ending legalized gambling. But there's a wild card, so to speak, in this issue. Some Indian tribes argue that authorizing any kind legalized gambling entitles them to build a casino here under the federal law allowing tribes to improve their economic standing by building casinos on their ancestral lands.

Much as anyone may object to the ills of wagering, weighed against the end of health care for nearly helpless people, it's a fairly easy choice. House Speaker Thomas Finneran has persistently been against the idea of legal gambling. But just as persistently, there have been suggestions — from people close to him, not from him — that he's not absolutely inflexible. It's all about revenue — and that's why, more and more, people are starting to talk tax hike in the halls of the Statehouse. Well, murmur tax hike.

The administration is showing no room for compromise on the question. As April arrived and the pace of returns stepped up at Department of Revenue headquarters, Romney pointed out taxpayers' refunds this year are smaller than they would be, or non-existent, because of last year's $1 billion plus tax increase.

Meanwhile, though, the tax rates he says are too high generated a rare flash of good budget news for the governor, and other Beacon Hill budget writers. Mostly driven by strong corporate and business receipts, tax collections for March exceeded projections by $74 million, and were up from March 2002. It was the first time tax collections have been up for back-to-back months since before the recession began.

The gratitude some tax-abhorring Republicans may have secretly felt at the lush take reflects the old, old quandary on the Hill, reflected in the old, old aphorism: "Everybody wants to go to heaven, but nobody wants to die."

Besides the momentous budget and tax questions coming home to roost, lawmakers had their own internal fiscal matters on their minds.

• Finneran against proposes e-z pay hike provision for leaders — Speaker Finneran filed legislation that would allow the House and Senate to raise the pay of committee chairs and other leaderships without changing state law, as is now the case. The change would mean the two branches could set their own bonus pay without gubernatorial involvement. The Senate declined to admit the measure for consideration, and a session to debate the proposal in the House was scrapped. But later, the measure was admitted by the Senate and sent to the Public Service Committee. The Speaker's aides again cited the rationale that if the governor is able to raise the pay of his or her top aides without the Legislature's say-so, the Legislature shouldn't need the governor to approve its leadership pay hikes.

• Tauro's ruling exacerbates Medicaid difficulty — Federal Judge Joseph Tauro blocked a Medicaid rate cut to nursing home pharmacies. The rate cut was supposed to take effect April 1; the Romney administration was counting on the move saving the state about $26 million per year. "By issuing the rate change as an emergency rule, (the state) violated (pharmacy operators') rights to a public rate-setting process," wrote Judge Tauro. Senate Ways and Means Chairwoman Therese Murray, D-Plymouth, said of the decision: "We need to figure out what this means and what it means to the governor's budget. This could be really bad. This could have far-reaching implications."

• Amorello: expect millions, not hundreds of millions, in dig reach back — Matthew Amorello, chairman of the Turnpike Authority, said the state probably will not achieve hundreds of millions or a $1 billion in recouped mismanagement paybacks from the project's general contractor, Bechtel/Parsons Brinkerhoff. Senate Long-Term Debt Committee Chairman Mark Montigny, D-New Bedford, pressing Amorello on how much can be garnered from Bechtel, called the $200,000 recouped so far during the $14.6 billion project "embarrassing."

• South Shore Chamber poll: 64 percent want Greenbush line — A lineup of business leaders from the South Shore released a poll found 64 percent of respondents favor construction of the controversial Greenbush Line commuter rail expansion. The poll queried 454 people from the seven towns along or near the line's proposed route.

• Romney forswears swearing Patrick in — The strange case of Rep. (?) Matthew Patrick continued, as the governor decided not to swear him in. Patrick was the winner of the Nov. 5 election and a subsequent recount in the 3rd Barnstable District, but a Superior Court judge has ordered a special election be held for the Patrick seat because of voting irregularities on Election Day. The House has chosen to ignore that directive, convening a panel that ruled Patrick should be seated. The Democrat-controlled House adopted the panel's ruling. The governor said that out of respect for the judicial branch, he would hold off on administering the oath until after the next court hearing in the matter, set for next week.

• Romney: we'll put sex offenders info online; suit promised — Announcing Jennifer Franco as the new chairwoman of the Sex Offender Registry Board, Gov. Romney said his administration will post data on the highest-level sex offenders on the Internet. That prompted the litigation director of the Committee for Public Counsel Services to say her office and other advocates for offenders will sue to stop the dissemination of the information.

• AG's office: corporate identity theft can't be prosecuted — In testimony before the Criminal Justice Committee, officials from Attorney General Thomas Reilly's office told lawmakers they need a specific law criminalizing the theft of the identity of companies and non-profit entities. Identity theft is the number one consumer complaint nationwide, and the state passed a law in 1998 outlawing the theft of individual's identities, but the AG's aides said that needs to be expanded to protect charitable and corporate entities, like fraudulent telemarketers saying they're from the Salvation Army.

• Healey is millionth "don't call" customer — To attract public attention for the state's new anti-telemarketing "don't call" list, Lt. Gov. Kerry Healey's staff called in reporters to watch her sign up as the millionth person to add a name to the "do not call" list begun by last year's consumer legislation. People who signed up before March 1 will no longer be eligible as telemarketing targets; calls for charity, public opinion surveys and a few other purposes are still allowed. "I know that I speak for a lot of people in the Commonwealth when I say life is busy enough without being forced to respond to unwanted phone solicitations at home," the lieutenant governor said.

• Former Sullivan aide wins right to face Sisk May 13 — A former aide to Rep. Joseph Sullivan, who is now running the state Lottery, won a four-man race for the Democratic nomination to replace Sullivan in the House. Joseph Driscoll pulled in 2,256 votes during the primary for the Braintree-based seat. His closest competitor, Joseph Powers, received 1,885 votes. Driscoll will face off against Republican Matthew Sisk, who was unopposed Tuesday, on May 13.

• Story of the Week — The removal of thousands from the Medicaid rolls had been talked about for months; now it's past the talking stage, and the protests are coming.

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on two roll calls from recent sessions. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.

Both House roll calls are on proposed amendments to a set of recently-approved rules to be followed when the House considers the fiscal 2004 state budget at the end of April. A key provision requires that any member who proposes an increase in spending in excess of $100,000 also offer a proposal decreasing spending by an equal or greater amount. Other provisions include requiring any tax hikes or tax cuts to be considered first followed by consideration of all other amendments and prohibiting earmarking of revenues from tax hikes for specific programs.

PROHIBIT EARMARKING OF TAX HIKES (H 3730)

House 45-101, rejected an amendment striking a new rule requiring that any tax hikes or tax cuts be considered first followed by consideration of all other amendments and prohibiting earmarking of revenues from tax hikes for specific programs. Amendment supporters said the new rule is anti-democratic and further reduces the power of rank and file members. They argued that a member who proposes a tax hike should be allowed to propose earmarking that revenue to education, local aid, health care or some other worthwhile program instead of having no control over the use of the revenue. Amendment opponents said the new rule is fiscally responsible and logical in light of the state's growing deficit. They argued that it is important to take a broad approach and establish how much revenue the state will receive prior to debate on where to spend the money. (A "Yea" vote is for striking the new rule requiring that taxes be considered first and prohibiting earmarking of revenues from tax hikes for specific programs. A "Nay" vote is against striking it and therefore favors the new rule).

N

MODIFY "INCREASE/DECREASE RULE" (H 3730)

House 42-103, rejected an amendment to the new rule requiring that any member who proposes an increase in spending in excess of $100,000 also offer a proposal decreasing spending by an equal or greater amount. The amendment would not require a corresponding decrease if the increased spending is funded by tax hikes approved by the House. Amendment supporters said this compromise is fair and fiscally responsible because it requires a member who proposes increased spending to also propose either a corresponding spending reduction or to specify that the increased spending will come from a previously-approved tax hike. Amendment opponents said the amendment basically would kill the fiscally responsible "increase/decrease rule" and lead to the filing of billions of dollars worth of amendments that members would claim are funded from tax hikes. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment that allows for increased spending without a corresponding decrease if the increased spending is funded by tax hikes approved by the House. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

SEX OFFENDERS ON WEBSITE - Gov. Romney announced that the state would begin to post photos of high-level sex offenders on the Internet beginning on May 15. The governor said the public has a right to know where these offenders live and work so they can protect their children. Critics vow to fight the action in court and argue the postings are illegal and go beyond the limits of state sex offender laws.

NAMING THE NEW TUNNEL - Gov. Romney, Senate President Bob Travaglini and House Speaker Tom Finneran recently announced their support of legislation naming the new Interstate 93 tunnel the "Liberty Tunnel" as a fitting reminder of the sacrifices made in the name of liberty. They also agreed to support naming the shorter I-90 connector tunnel for the late U.S. House Speaker Tip O'Neil who was instrumental in securing funding for the Big Dig. Last week, a group of legislators said the names should be flipped and promised they will file legislation to name the larger tunnel after Tip. In response to the controversy, Senator Bob Hedlund (R-Weymouth) announced plans to file a measure to name the tunnel the "Taxpayers Tunnel."

SEAT BELTS (S 1337) - The Public Safety Committee held a hearing on legislation providing for primary enforcement of the seat belt law by allowing police officers to issue tickets to drivers not wearing seat belts even if the driver has not been stopped for another violation. Current law permits only secondary enforcement and prohibits the fine from being imposed unless the driver is stopped for another violation or some other offense. The House defeated the bill on a tie vote in 2001.

MOBILE PHONE RESTRICTIONS (S 1390) - The Public Safety Committee held a hearing on a proposal to restrict the use of mobile phones while driving. Current law allows drivers to use mobile phones and citizens band radios as long as one hand remains on the steering wheel at all times. The legislation would not affect citizens band radios but would prohibit the use of mobile phones, except for emergencies, unless they are equipped with hands-free technology. The measure also prohibits drivers under 18 years old from using any type of mobile phone except for emergencies.

AUTO TRUNK SAFETY LATCHES (H 1178) - The Public Safety Committee held a hearing on a proposal requiring every car to be equipped with a safety latch on the inside of the trunk in order to allow easy escape by anyone trapped.

Y = Yes; N = No, NV = No Vote

Train hearing is Tuesday

Two sessions are scheduled

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Communities which would be affected by Greenbush restoration are gearing up for the upcoming Army Corps of Engineers public hearing.

The meeting is being held at the request of public officials from Greenbush towns and is open to all interested parties on either side of the issue. The overall project involves installing 18 miles of rail line and building seven new commuter rail stations and a layover facility at the end of the line.

The hearing is scheduled for Tuesday, April 15, in Sanborn Auditorium at town hall, 210 Central St., Hingham. There will be two sessions, one from 1 to 4 p.m. and the other beginning at 7 p.m. Registration for those who wish to comment on the project will begin at noon and 6 p.m. respectively. A stenographer will be on hand to record the comments of those who prefer not to speak publicly.

At the hearing, the Army Corps of Engineers will listen to project opponents and proponents alike, who will provide information pertinent to the Corps review of the project. The Corps, which is the lead federal agency overseeing plans to restore the Greenbush rail line, will ultimately decide whether or not to issue a permit to the MBTA which would allow them to move forward. The MBTA announced recently that the project would be delayed by six months pending awarding of the necessary permits.

The public hearing is in response to an application from the MBTA for a permit to place fill material within a total of 7.81 acres of wetlands and waterways for the construction of the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Railroad.

Key issues revolve around potential adverse impacts on waterways and wetlands, but the scope is broad enough so that the Corps will also consider land use, the benefits of installing four-quadrant gates, and conservation and environmental concerns. Hingham's Memorandum of Understanding with the MBTA will also be addressed because Selectmen are concerned that the transit authority appears to be scaling back on previously agreed upon mitigation measures.

"The hearing is a good opportunity to mention significant existing impacts and the need to mitigate those before the project can move forward," said Hingham Town Administrator Charles Cristello. Area towns continue their push for four-quadrant gates, which are considered safer than two-quadrant gates because they have arms that stop traffic on both sides of the street, preventing cars from skirting around the gate to beat the train. Two-quad gates stop traffic only on the righthand side of the road, requiring a median strip to prevent cars from trying to beat the train.

"Median barriers are not a wise decision," Cristello said. "They're not what the town's Memorandum of Understanding with the MBTA calls for. There will also be visual impacts on the Historic District." It was further noted that the Corps is requiring the MBTA to provide a site-specific analysis of each grade crossing, taking into account the safety of vehicles, pedestrians, bicyclists, and use of the intersection by emergency vehicles. The Corps is also requiring that the analysis be coordinated with and reviewed by the Federal Railroad Administration.

Those who are unable to attend the hearing to offer comments publicly or through the stenographer have until April 25 to do so. Comments may be sent to: Ted Lento, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, New England District, Regulatory Division, 696 Virginia Road, Concord, Mass. 01742-2751.

Troops from Hingham's 1058th saluted at Hull event

Regional rally held Saturday

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Little girls had yellow ribbons around their pigtails, grownups displayed the stars and stripes in neckties, scarves or sweaters, and many veterans wore their garrison caps.

But the common bond among the 250 or so — who hailed from towns across the South Shore and packed the VFW post in Hull on Saturday — stretched way beyond what adorned their heads or clothing.

In a boisterous display of cheers, foot stomping and applause, the crowd needed little encouragement from any of the array of speakers and patriotic songs to let the soldiers of Hingham's 1058th Transportation Company know they have their unconditional support.

The National Guard unit, which draws from many area towns, was deployed in February as part of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Gulf War veteran Larry McInnis urged members of the audience to chant "USA, USA" loud enough for the 1058th could hear them. The National Guard unit was sent to Ft. Drum, N.Y. to train before going overseas.

"The media is finally figuring out the real hero is not the overpaid ballplayer or movie star," he said to loud applause, as he held up the front page of the Boston Herald featuring a photograph of 19-year-old former POW, Jessica Lynch of Palestine, W. Va. "She could be in the foxhole to my left or right any day."

McInnis also praised the military families and spouses who, with as little as 72 hours notice, have to cope bravely and often alone while their loved one is in harm's way. He asked everyone to pray for the troops, put a candle in their windows to light their way home, and tie a yellow ribbon around a tree or mailbox.

Cathy Wasik, mother of Specialist Greg Wasik of the 1058th, said her son fractured his skull in a work-related accident in January and got the OK to return to work a month later. "The next day he got clearance to go (with the 1058th)," she said. "There was no doubt in his mind he was going to go."

"Most of us who supported the troops in Vietnam didn't say anything. I've made up my mind not to be quiet anymore. As a Marine and citizen of the United States that is my freedom."
— Mary Jeanette Murray, Cohasset

Wasik, who said her son was sent from Ft. Drum on a special assignment to get trucks to the Gulf and is now on a ship overseas, talked to him on the telephone the night before the rally. She said he "sounds up but he misses home and his unit. He can't wait to see others from the 1058th."

Danny Napolitano of Marshfield, who served in Afghanistan with his U.S. Army National Guard unit out of Taunton, said he was filled with mixed emotions.

"Of course it's great to be home with my family," the father of three said. "But at the same time, there's a sense of guilt with the mission in Iraq and our loss of servicemen and women."

Naplitano, who is a sergeant with the Suffolk County Sheriff's department, said his unit wouldn't hesitate to serve in Iraq if called upon.

"If we were called to serve again, we'd be proud to do so," he said.

Former state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset, a Marine who served in World War II, said she wasn't going to be silent while the troops were overseas. She said it wasn't possible to support the troops and be against the war "while our boys and girls are over there."

"Most of us who supported the troops in Vietnam didn't say anything," she said. "I've made up my mind not to be quiet anymore. As a Marine and citizen of the United States that is my freedom."

The event was sponsored by the James W. Richardson VFW Post 1787; the Hingham and Hull Republican town committees, with the support of the VFW and legion posts in Hingham, and the Scituate Republican Town Committee.

Featured speakers included Napolitano and McInnis; local attorney David Grossack of the Hull Republican Town Committee; state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham; state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth; Kingston Selectman Olavo "Ollie" DeMacedo; and Chuck Morse, radio talk show host with WROL-Boston. Soloist Joyce Kimball led the crowd in singing a range of patriotic songs, including Lee Greenwood's "God Bless the USA."

Morse said while freedom can be "a contagious thing when vigorously defended…it doesn't, however, grow on trees" and must be asserted, even if that means going to war as a last resort.

"Our heroic men and women in uniform are removing a threat to freedom everywhere, a threat that made itself known on our own shores on Sept. 11, 2001," he said.

DeMacedo, the Kingston selectman, said it takes men and women of character to make tough decisions in tough times, regardless of public opinion.

"History will prove this war is right and just," he said. DeMacedo, who immigrated to the United States, said he was grateful to be an American.

"There's no place I'd rather be," he said. "What a land, what a country. Would people sacrifice everything to come here in an inner tube if it were so bad?"

Quoting the French author of the 19th century, Alexis de Tocqueville, DeMacedo said "America is great because she is good. If America ceases to be good, America will cease to be great."

"Think about this," DeMacedo said. "What if democracy was never born; if America never was. Think about the condition of our world and all the people that would be living under tyranny."

Sister shoe store is family affair

New shop opens in Tedeschi Plaza

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

For the Lagrotteria family of Cohasset, there's no business like shoe business.

Of Jim and Dorothy Lagrotteria's 11 children, eight have worked in shoe sales at one time or another. Six are still involved in the business, and one of them, Mary (Lagrotteria) Sease, has just started a store of her own — Shoe Market for Kids, at Tedeschi Plaza on Route 3A.

The store opened its doors last Tuesday and held its grand opening over the weekend. Sease credits her brother, Gary Lagrotteria, who owns Shoe Market in Cohasset Plaza, for providing her with the resources to open the store. According to Sease, Gary has been the driving force behind his siblings' obsession with footwear.

"He just sucks everybody in," she said. "He can talk anybody into anything."

In 1995, Greg talked Mary into running a shoe store he was starting up in Portland, Maine. She fell in love with the business and became one of several siblings working for Greg, who also operated a shoe store in West Palm Beach, Fla. at the time. Then, five years ago, Sease moved her brother's Maine-based operation to Cohasset. What was previously Shoe Cottage became Shoe Market.

Now, Sease has taken on a new challenge — Shoe Market for Kids, you might say, is a genuine "sister store." The clientele are younger and the sizes are smaller than what you might find at the regular Shoe Market, but Sease says the rewarding feeling of fitting someone with quality footwear hasn't changed a bit.

"We've had people come in and hug us because their feet have never felt so comfortable," she said.

Sease decided to open a children's shoe store after learning that Combs Shoe Co. of Scituate was going out of business later this year. She said owner Bob Combs, who has had the store for nearly 40 years, was the "guru of shoes."

"I can only hope to be as patient and as big of a professional as Mr. Combs," she said. "Everyone that's grown up on the South Shore has brought their children to him, me included."

Sease said she would have never opened a new store if Combs wasn't closing shop. "He's the Mister Rogers of the neighborhood…We didn't want to infringe on his business," she said.

Sease said children's footwear has come a long way in the last 20 years. For one thing, shoe companies like Stride Rite are now far more conscious of the effect their shoes have on babies' and toddlers' feet. Because of that, Sease puts an added emphasis on making sure the size is right.

"We pride ourselves on fitting," she said, noting that her employees had recently been trained by a Stride Rite representative. "We're not pushing the shoe out the door. We're getting the right size and the right width so the shoe fits right."

Shoe Market for Kids offers 15 to 20 different brands of kids' shoes — everything from Sperry and New Balance to to Polo and Primigi, an imported Italian "comfort shoe."

Sease says she has her family and friends to thank for helping get her store off the ground. Her father, Jim, helped with carpentry work inside the store. Brother Gary helped her establish a line of credit with the major shoe companies. Friends helped paint the store, and sister Jennifer is helping her work the register and tend to customers two days a week. Sisters Annmarie, Christine and Barbara, who now manages Shoe Market, helped out with this weekend's grand opening. And Sease's 15-year-old-son and 10-year-old daughter will join the Shoe Market for Kids staff this summer.

"This has just been a blessing," she said.. "Everybody contributed in some way."

Then again, as Sease recalled, teamwork is nothing new for the Lagrotteria family. Growing up in Cohasset, she said, her siblings were always helping each other out.

"They'd be involved in anything you do," she said. "We're a very close family."

Historic Hingham homes on tour

The 79th Annual Tour of Historic Hingham Homes, sponsored by the Hingham Historical Society is slated for Sunday, May 18 from noon to 6 p.m.

Five private homes will be open for viewing. The 1788 Jonathon Cushing home has an elegant interior combining both federal and Italian themes. The 1846 cottage of Issacher Fuller has grown into a charming home with spacious living areas on two levels. An 1895 shingle-style home boasts an impressive staircase, a greenhouse, and a lovely double parlor. A remodeled summer house features spectacular views of the Boston skyline and Hingham Bay, while a gambrel cottage has been much expanded to house a fascinating collection of family paintings, Chines artifacts and decorative accents.

These homes are not handicap-accessible.

"Ornate, Ordinary and Oh-So-Necessary Ceramics in Daily Life," exhibits from the society's collection, will be shown throughout the Old Ordinary on tour day, May 18; and again from June 17 through Sept. 6, Tuesdays to Saturdays, 1:30-4 p.m.

Tickets are $15 in advance and $20 on the day of the tour. They are available by mail and also at Bowl and Board in Hingham Square, the Hingham Public Library at 66 Leavitt St. and Noble's Camera Shops in Hingham Square and Lincoln Plaza. Tickets on tour day will be sold only at the Old Ordinary, 21 Lincoln St. after 9 a.m. At that time, tickets may also be exchanged for tour books.

To order tickets by mail, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope and your check to: The Hingham Historical Society, P.O. Box 434, Hingham 02043 and mark the envelope: "House Tour".

For more information, please call 781-749-1851 or 781-749-1574; or visit the society's Web site at http://www.hinghamhistorical.org.

Low roster turnout doesn't get lady tracksters down

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The sport of track and field is a unique one, in that it requires individual talent, and very little teamwork for the team to succeed. And so, when the team has very little shot of winning, individuals still have the opportunity of achieving their personal goals. That is exactly what coach Al LaFountain is hoping for the girls on his track team.

After being on the business end of two early season whoopings (losing to Norwell 110-28 and to Rockland by a similar margin), the main objectives of the season will be focused around qualifying individuals for the elite, postseason meets like States.

"We could have held our own against either one of those teams," noted LaFountain, who expected 20 girls on the team this year. "It's just that eight or nine girls decided not to come out. But the kids that came out are fantastic."

There are some very talented tracksters on the current squad, even though the squad, at 10 girls, is a far cry from the 60-name roster Rockland brings to its meets. Junior captain Jenn Buckley will lead the way for postseason qualification after two great seasons as a freshman and sophomore.

Buckley has already qualified for States in the 1-mile, running 5:34, which is almost as fast as the main miler on the Cohasset boys team. Buckley has also seen success in the field events, coming within a foot of qualification in the javelin with a throw of 90 feet, 10 inches.

Sophomore Mary Silvia, who emerged as a freshman force in 2002, is within two hundredths of a second in the half mile, or 800-meters. Fellow sophomore Nicole Whitney is similarly bearing down on qualifying in her running event, the 400-meter, or quarter-mile.

Senior LaRaine Langford won the South Shore League title in the 100-meter hurdles last year, showing her quickness, agility, and, above all,

Errors do in softball team in varsity debut

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

If only the numbers on last Thursday's softball game between Cohasset High and Holbrook High could be reversed.

If the scores were reversed, it would have made for an easy story to write, with a lot of one liners here and there.

Unfortunately, the scores were not reversed and this story has to be written with great delicacy, feelings and understanding. Actually, I'm just trying to stall time to keep from writing down the score.

Let's just say Holbrook won the game, and I will write down the score at the end of the story just to make sure I don't say something smart alecky.

First of all, coach Deb Bostwick and her Skippers had some legitimate excuses concerning the lopsided score of the game.

For one thing, the opening day of the season was very cold and wet. For another thing, it was Cohasset's first varsity game since dropping varsity softball seven years ago. For another thing, the Skippers are a very young team with just one senior, captain Heather Perino, a leftfielder, six juniors, six sophomores and five freshmen.

Obviously, the team has a lot of building ahead of it.

"It was an extremely cold day," said coach Bostwick. "Would you believe it took the kids at least four innings to warm up, it was so cold?"

This will give you a bit of a hint of how the final score came out. At the end of four innings, Holbrook was leading, 9-3. Cohasset had committed eight errors over the four innings, with more coming. The Skippers fin-

The streak is over.

For the first time since 2000, a Cohasset runner failed to protect the home turf.

Kit Wells, of Brookline, ran to a first place finish in the 27th annual Cohasset Road Race-by-the-Sea, this past Sunday, covering the scenic 10-kilometer course in a brisk 34:24—an outstanding mile pace of 5:33—to finish comfortably ahead of fellow Brookliner Bryan Doldt (34:48) and Brighton's Robert LaPlante (35:03).

Falmouth's Margaret Bradley was the first female finisher, her 39:49 finish placing her more than one minute ahead of Needham's Meg Hughes (40:52). Westwood's Caitlin Mezzano took third (41:54), followed by Charlestown's Heather Turgeon (42:03) and Hingham's Katherine Forbes (42:31).

The top Cohasset finisher was Jim Cavanaro, 40, who took 10th overall with his run of 36:45, good for third in the 40-49 age group. Chris Pariseault was the next townie to cross the line, taking 20th overall with his 38:27 finish, as he just barely held off fellow Cohasset resident David Dugan (22nd, 38:41).

Barbara Buckley (43:55) was Cohasset's top female finisher, taking 81st overall and second in her 40-49 age division. Linda Nistico-Klier (84th, 44:11) was not far off that pace, as she took eighth overall in the 18-39 group.

Last April, Cohasset's Paul Stanislawzyk was the overall winner. The year before that, native Dyan Young won the women's race.

Boys tennis shines through bad weather

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

While unseasonably snowy weather has kept the girls team from competing in a dual match in the 2003 season, the boys team has taken advantage of their early non-league schedule to jump out to a 2-0 record.

Second year boys coach Kent Parrot came into the season unsure of whether or not he would even have a full team, but solid play from a now experienced lineup indicates things could be looking up for the squad.

After beating Hanover, the former SSL rival, in the snow last Tuesday, 3-2, Cohasset buried Cape Cod Academy on the road by a sweeping score of 5-0. It marked only the third time in the last three years that a Cohasset boys tennis team has recorded a shutout.

At first singles, Dave Ingber fought off a nagging case of bronchitis to take down Cape Cod's ace in straight sets. Although he fell 3-0 in the opening to the free-swinging sophomore, Ingber rallied to

All-Scholastic boys basketball team

Cohasset's Bildodeau named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young men you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

In the end, however, we limited ourselves to a team of just 19, and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top male basketball players in Marinerland for this honor:

He did so many things well for us. He was already a good player, but he worked hard to improve his all around game. That really showed at the defensive end, and from the free throw line. Quality over quantity

Cohasset tracksters concentrate on individual feats

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

With only 22 athletes in his entire program, it's not surprising to hear Cohasset High track coach Al LaFontain talking almost exclusively about individual goals where this season is concerned.

"I told the kids to concentrate on their best events this year, and not worry as much about team wins," said the fifth year CHS coach. "We just don't have the numbers to cover all of the events against the bigger teams in our league."

This harsh reality was on full display last Thursday when both the Cohasset boys and girls teams fell to 0-2 on the season, each suffering lopsided losses to perennial South Shore League power Norwell.

Cohasset boys took first place in 10 of 14 events, but, with just 13 athletes on the squad, they watched in frustration as the much deeper Norwell team cleaned up on the second and third place points to win going away, 96-48.

Senior captain Ian Kidder took three firsts on his own—winning the javelin, triple jump and 200-meter race—and also had a hand in a fourth win, running a leg for the victorious 4x100 relay team.

Captain Jared Krupczak was also a part of the 4x100 win, and pulled off solo victories in the 100-meter dash and long jump.

A third senior, Braun Goodson, took a couple of firsts in the shot put and discus.

A ninth win was turned in by junior Nick Parker, who took first place points in his debut in the high hurdles, and the locals also swept the high jump competition.

Unfortunately, the Skippers could not even enter any athletes in the 4x400 meter relay or 2-mile race, so they relinquished 20 points without a battle there.

The Cohasset boys squad, which was hit hard by graduation, has now lost as many meets this season as it had in LaFountain's first two seasons at the helm. The Skippers lost once in both 1999 and 2000, and then went unbeaten in league competition each of the past two seasons.

"We lost a lot of talent to graduation," said LaFountain, referring to athletes such as Tim Baird, Peter Maitland, Liam Martin and Dan Kinchla, "and our numbers are down this year. Still, we have some talented athletes this year who I think can do well in the big meets and the states."

Ditto for the girls squad, notes coach LaFountain.

The Lady Skippers got impressive first place finishes from junior Mary Silvia in the 800 and freshman Lisa Musto in the 2-mile, but, with just eight team members, simply could not keep pace with Norwell. The host Lady Clippers won going away,110-28.

Cohasset was without returning Mariner All-Scholastic trackster Jen Buckley, a standout in the mile, 2-mile and javelin, as well as a fast-improving discus thrower. With her, Tuesday's score would have no doubt been much more palatable.

Fortunately, the injury to Buckley was not a serious one, and she should be ready to perform should today's scheduled hosting of Hull (3:30 start) go off as planned.

The few, the proud

good form. She is up for defending her title this year, and could qualify for states. She has also picked up with the shot put and discus events in the field, with the emaciated squad rarely putting more than one competitor in a given event.

LaFountain would have liked to put together a girls squad that could have made a run at a South Shore League title, especially with the success of the boys teams, winning the SSL in each of the past two years. However, he maintains a roll with the punches attitude.

"I'm not begging people to come out for my team," he mentioned. "You come out because you have a passion for track and field. It is just a major re-building year."

In fact, there are positive aspects of the smaller team (which probably do not outweigh the benefits of a big team, but they are positives nonetheless.) For example, the younger team members especially have received extra one-on-one coaching with LaFountain and Sue Giuglia, something that will definitely help them this year and beyond.

Lafountain has tried to create a feeder system that would encourage athletes to get involved with track at a younger age, like the popular soccer and lacrosse camps over the summer do for those sports. His efforts, such as attempting to create a winter running club, have been stifled, according to LaFountain, because it would steal too many quality athletes from their varsity winter sports.

The lack of numbers is undoubtedly frustrating for coaches and members of the team alike. In truth, being so strapped for athletes makes very little sense after the boys success in the league and some of the girls successes at States.

"I've always said that if we win, the numbers will come," offered LaFountain. "Well, we've won, and the numbers are disappearing."

win 12 straight games for a 6-3, 6-0 victory.

At second singles, junior Tim Anton improved to 2-0 with his 6-3, 6-3 win. Playing a much taller opponent, Anton utilized his tough serve with accurate lobbing to grab the victory. The win leaves his career record at 14-4, the best winning percentage on the team.

Senior Ross Lieb-Lappen also moved to 2-0 on the year, taking his match 6-3, 6-2. Lieb-Lappen has always seen success at third singles over the past few seasons, combining his athleticism and speed at the net with a great finishing ability.

In both the wins over Hanover and over Cape Cod Academy, Cohasset took all three singles matches. However, the doubles players, after losing both first and second doubles to Hanover, bounced back for very solid wins.

Senior Scott Faber and junior Andrew Wise paired for a dominating win, that featured Wise's tremendous returning and lobbing skills with Faber's putaways right up at the net. If they play the way they did last Thursday, first doubles could become a very strong point on the team, even though it was a rough point on the 2002 squad.

"What can I say, when I'm on, I'm on," noted Wise of his three-set victory, which he clearly felt should have been over in two. "We just fell asleep in the first set."

The freshman tandem of Nils Sceery and Chris Pescatore showed promise for a terrific year at second double, with a decisive straight sets win. Pescatore, suiting up for his first match of the year after being named as a late addition to the roster, will be a great asset to the team as a doubles player. While Sceery may end up in the singles rotation as the season moves along, his skills in doubles are very important to controlling the tempo of the game off the serve and at the net.

The girls team, while primed for yet another monster year and run at the South Shore League title, have been on the unfortunate end of the bad weather. They have had matches against local rivals Norwell, who shared the SSL crown with Cohasset last year, and Scituate, a non-league foe that has matched up with Cohasset for some very exciting matches in the last few years, postponed for a later date in the season.

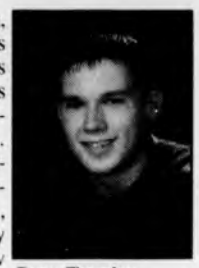
scoring this season, averaging 21 ppg despite missing seven games with mono…Coppens was also second in assists (65)…His all-around play on the court helped land Rockland (22-2) in the finals of the Div. 3 South Sectional and win the Patriot League title (11-1)…Defensively, Coppens shut down some of the area's best players and led the Rockland team in steals (65)…At the line, Coppens went 79 percent, hitting 96-of-122…Also a receiver on the RHS football squad, Coppens will return to lead the Bulldog offense next season. Rockland coach Bob Fisher: "He's a special player. He's an offensive threat whenever he has the ball. He can hit threes and drive just as well. He sees the floor exceptionally well. He's going to be one of the best."

Joe Esposito - Senior (Capt.)
Center - Rockland

Joe Esposito

With many opposing defenses fixed on fellow All-Scholastic Joe Coppens, Esposito made team's pay…
Despite being outsized, the 5-foot, 11-inch center still remained successful averaging a double-double on the season with 12 ppg and 10 rebounds per game, which led the team…His consistent performance under the hoop helped Rockland (22-2) reach the Div. 3 South Sectional finals and win a Patriot League title (11-1)…A PL All-star, Esposito took a team-high 15 offensive fouls, which demonstrates his ability to guard the game's big men…Also a football player at RHS, Esposito plans to attend St. Joseph's in Maine and continue his basketball career. Rockland coach Bob Fisher: "Mr. Consistent. He played so much bigger than his size. Underneath the hoop, he's aggressive and physical, but he's also a very gentle, classy man. He's a coach's delight."

Ryan Thornley - Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Rockland



Ryan Thornley

Voted a captain as the season went on, Thornley's growth this year was unmatched…A 6-foot, 2-inch forward, Thornley and fellow All-Scholastic Joe Esposito, teamed for one of the more productive inside games around…Thornley was the Bulldogs' (22-2) second-leading rebounder (170 this season) and also shot 75 percent at the free throw line…A workhorse under the basket, Thornley is a great inside passer and solid defender, both of which helped Rockland reach the Div. 3 South Sectional finals and win a Patriot League title (11-1)…A PL All-star, Thornley was the leading scorer at the All-star game. Rockland coach Bob Fisher: "Without Ryan, we don't go to UMass Boston (site of the D3 final). He was without question the most improved player. His work ethic is impeccable, he's a tremendous presence inside, and was the spiritual leader in the locker room."

Eric Mahoney - Senior (Capt.)
Point-Guard - Rockland

Eric Mahoney

Cited by his coach as being a tremendous leader on and off the court, Mahoney was a great inspiration for the Patriot League champion Bulldogs (11-1)…His leadership, performance, and great attitude helped Rockland (22-2) reach the finals of the Div. 3 South Sectional…The second leading scorer with 13.1 ppg, Mahoney was deadly from three-point land…The team's best defender, Mahoney was always assigned to guard the opposing team's best player and he relished it…Was the team's second-leading assist man (61) and third in steals (45)…A two-time PL All-star and straight-A student at RHS, Mahoney plans to attend UMass Lowell to study Engineering and possibly play basketball. Rockland coach Bob Fisher: "If you put all the captains in the area together, Eric would captain the captains. He's a natural born leader and inspired this team to rise above. He was the heart and pulse of this team. He will be deeply, deeply missed."

Rob Schuler - Senior (Capt.)
Point-Guard - Hanover

Rob Schuler

A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Schuler had another standout season for the Indians (13-10, 7-5 PL)…After getting off to a slow start, Schuler fueled Hanover's winning of six of their last eight games down the stretch, thus qualifying them for the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney…The three-year starter was among the team's leading scorers, averaging 15 points per game, while lead the squad in assists with eight per game…Defensively, Schuler was among the best in the Patriot League, averaging four steals a game…Scored a game high 25 points in Hanover's thrilling 84-63 win in the finals of the Abington tourney…Schuler also plays baseball and soccer at HHS…A PL All-star, Schuler plans to attend Bates College where he may continue both his baseball and basketball careers. Hanover coach Mark Malloy: "Rob was a great leader. He had a lot to do with bringing the team together in the second half of the season. He's seen a lot of pressure and always responded very well. He's a great kid."

Brent DiGiovanna - Junior Center - Hanover

Brent DiGiovanna

One of the Patriot League's best "big men", DiGiovanna (6'3") led the Indians' in scoring this season with an average 16 points per game…A workhorse under the basket, the three-year starter was difficult to stop, pulling down an average 11 boards per game…In a victory over Hingham this season, DiGiovanna put up 29 points and 20 rebounds…His performance under the hoop was key down the stretch, as the Indians (13-10, 7-5 PL) won six of their last eight games to qualify for post-season play…A PL All-star, DiGiovanna will captain the hoop squad next year. Hanover coach Mark Malloy: "He's come a long way since his freshman season, when we went 3-17. He's really matured. He's a force down low and really understands the concept of team play."

Bill Junkins - Senior Center - Abington

Bill Junkins

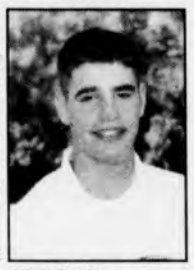
After coming off the bench last season, Junkins was the Green Wave's breakout player inside, averaging a double-double with 10.2 points and 11.8 rebounds per game…Not a flashy player, Junkins' workhorse mentality under the basket is what made him successful for the South Shore League runners-up (10-2)…His efforts helped lead Abington (15-7) to the Div. 3 South tourney…Also a member of the AHS football squad, Junkins made a key interception in the team's Div. 5 Super Bowl victory last fall…Junkins plans to attend UMass Dartmouth and continue his football career. Abington coach Don Byron: "The way he stepped up this year without having much playing time in the past was just impressive. Bill was a significant player because he just did so much on the inside. He was probably the best rebounder in the league and to average a double-double is just incredible."

Brian McSharry - Junior (Capt.)
Point -Guard - Abington

Brian McSharry

Playing on the rebuilding Green Wave squad, McSharry more than fit the bill…The junior finished as Abington's leading scorer with 16.9 points per game, while also contributing 5.4 rebounds a game…A great ball-handler who can score from anywhere, McSharry led Abington (15-7) to a 10-2 finish in the South Shore League, good for second, and to the Div. 3 South tourney…He was an SSL All-star this season…As quarterback of the AHS football squad, McSharry helped lead Abington to a Div. 5 Super Bowl title last fall…He will return to captain both teams next season. Abington coach Don Byron: "With all we lost last year, we needed someone to step up. Brian was that player for us. He had the most effect on whether we won or lost a game. Brian has a tremendous scoring ability and a good nose for the ball. He is one of the most respected players in the area right now."

Nick DeVito - Senior (Capt.)
Center - Hingham



Nick Devito

Perhaps better known for his skills on the baseball field, DeVito's performance on the basketball court drew praise from area coaches…As captain of a rebuilding Hingham squad, DeVito averaged a double-double, racking up 16 points and 12 rebounds per game…Standing at 6'5", the Patriot League All-star was one of the best big men…Ranked second on the Harbormen (8-12) team in assists and steals…Was most proud of his performances against Hanover and fellow All-Scholastic Brent DiGiovanna…DeVito is a standout shortstop and pitcher on the HHS squad and has garnered the attention of several colleges and pro-scouts. Hingham coach Jon Rice: "He's a tough player with strong hands. Once the ball's in his hands, no one's going to take it away. He developed some great post moves and matched up well with other big guys. He took it as a personal challenge and it was exciting to watch."

Mike Sullivan - Senior (Capt.)
Center - Marshfield

Mike Sullivan

A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Sullivan had the difficult task of leading a young Rams squad this season…
The team's only Old Colony League All-star, Sullivan averaged a double-double this season for Marshfield (7-13, 5-9 OCL) with 15.5 points and 10 rebounds per game… The 6-foot, 4-inch center was among the OCL's best players, finishing as the fourth-leading scorer in the league…Strong, aggressive, and smart, Sullivan was a tough player to stop inside the paint…Sullivan had two big games in the OCL this season, scoring 26 points against B-R and 35 points (25 in the second half) in a loss to Plymouth South…Sullivan is looking at Bridgewater State, Colby-Sawyer, and Endicott and hopes to continue his basketball career. Marshfield coach Ron Jamieson: "Mike was solid last year but his year he really elevated his performance through dedication and hard work in the off-season. He not only came to compete at every game, he came to compete in practice too. He was our go-to player on offense, but was also our anchor on defense. He is a great leader."

Tom Cuddihy - Junior (Capt.)
Guard - Scituate

Tom Cuddihy

Not only did the junior lead Eastern Mass. in scoring (29.2 points per game) and break Scituate High's all-time single season scoring mark this winter, he also became the school's all-time career scorer with 1,190 points…the sturdily put together 5-11, 170-pound swingman scored in every conceivable way this year, from long range, short range, going strong and posting up…also an outstanding ballhandler and very good passer, skills which are helping to attract the Div. 1 collegiate scouts…does not have blazing speed, but has a great first step and uses his body extremely well to protect the ball…also an extremely powerful leaper…two-time Mariner All-Scholastic selection…a gifted athlete who gave up football in order to concentrate year round on basketball…plays for the AAU Coastal Pops, the team which finished 12th in this summer's national tourney…also led the Patriot League in scoring last year (18.6 ppg)…Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic…scored over 40 points three times this season…also a track standout in the spring for SHS…Scituate coach Matt Poirier: "Tom really had a great year. There was a lot of pressure on him game in and game out with teams doing everything they could to stop him, but he still scored his points consistently. He also worked to improve on his defense. He took some big charges in big games, and those are the kinds of things that really made me sit up and take notice."

Gerry Corcoran - Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Norwell

Gerry Corcoran

Clearly one of the most physically talented players in all of Massachusetts the last several years…the athletic 6-foot-5 swingman finished fifth in Eastern Mass in scoring this season (25.1 points per game) and wrapped up his high school career with over 2,000 career points to easily surpass the all-time NHS scoring record…three-time Mariner All-Scholastic selection…has been recruited by several prominent colleges, including some with Div. 1 basketball programs, but plans to attend a year of prep school in order to improve his collegiate prospects…helped the Clippers to a 21-1 regular season and to the sectional semifinals of the state tourney for the second year in a row…became a much more complete player this season, as he worked hard to not only vary his offensive game, but to become a better assist-man…an absolutely scintillating passer in transition…exploded for 26 of his game high 43 points over a 5:57 stretch in Clippers second round tourney win over Bourne…an excellent long-range sniper, but he is at his best offensively working off the dribble and taking it strong to the hoop… four-time South Shore League All-Star…also a Boston Globe, Boston Herald and Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic selection…plays AAU basketball year round in the BABC program…son of former Celtics draft pick and current Dean College coach Gerry Corcoran, Sr.…grandson of late Boston Globe columnist Will McDonough…Norwell coach John Willis: "Gerry is just a tremendously gifted offensive player. When he's got it going at the offensive end, he's as good as anyone I've seen at this level."

John Mohan - Junior Guard - Norwell

John Mohan

This junior emerged as one of the most well-rounded players on the South Shore this season…moved from shooting guard to the point this season to direct the South Shore League's most explosive offense…averaged 19.6 points and over seven assists per game for the 23-2 Clippers…an exceptional ballhandler, shooter, scorer and passer…he is also a far more effective rebounder and inside player than his 5-foot-10, 160 pound frame might suggest…two time South Shore League all-star and Mariner All-Scholastic selection…plays AAU basketball year round for the prestigious Coastal Pops, the 12th ranked U-16 team in the nation this past summer…also an excellent football player who started at quarterback and cornerback for the Clippers this past fall, earning All-League defensive honors…little brother of Steve and Mike Mohan, also football and basketball standouts for Norwell… Norwell coach John Willis: "I call him 'Little Mac' because he reminds me of (former NHS hoop standout) Dan McNamara, and that's the ultimate compliment in my mind. Johnny is the guy who helps keep it all together for us out there at times. He's the player I worry least about. He just goes out and gets the job done at both ends, and does whatever it takes to win. He's just dynamite."

Craig Sutherland - Senior
Forward - Norwell

Craig Sutherland

Quite possibly the most pleasant surprise among all South Shore hoopsters this season…the athletic 6-foot-3 power forward moved into the Clippers starting lineup this winter and averaged a double-double for the season with 12 points and 12 rebounds per game…coupled great natural leaping ability with a workmanlike approach down low to absolutely dominate in rebounding battles this season…also has a very nice touch around the basket and improving range…parlayed his breakout season into an opportunity to play college basketball next year for Dean College…was actively recruited by a few college coaches…plans to major in Business at Dean…Norwell coach John Willis: "He is truly a success story. He came along late, but put it all together, athletically and academically. He has a very bright future in basketball. He's an exceptional athlete. He rebounds like a bull and gives you everything he's got."

Derek Wigman - Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Silver Lake

Derek Wigman

This two time Mariner All-Scholastic selection led the Old Colony League in scoring (18.9 ppg, 20.6 in league play) this season, and also led the Lakers in rebounding for the second straight season (nine per game)…team MVP… the 6-foot-2, 190 pound power forward possesses great hands, a soft shooting touch, superior leaping ability and one of the quickest first steps on the South Shore, all of which help him regularly school considerably larger players on the interior…led team in drawn charges…very good at drawing contact and converting on his chances from the line (77 percent as a junior)…two time OCL all-star…led the Lakers to a 14-6 record and a second place finish in the OCL…won Silver Lake's Top Male Athlete Award for the winter season…also selected for Patriot Ledger and Brockton Enterprise All-Scholastic teams… plays AAU basketball in the off-season for the South Shore Patriots…Silver Lake coach Dick Arieta: "Derek is probably the most prolific scorer on the inside 6-2 or under I've ever worked with. The most important thing he gave us this season was his consistency. Derek is extremely strong and knows how to use that. He's got a lot of tools, but I'd say his best asset is that first step. There weren't too many people who could handle that straight up."

Garcell Beauduy - Senior (Capt.)
Center - Holbrook

Garcell Beauduy

This 6-foot-1 glass cleaner grabbed an astounding 604 rebounds over the past two plus seasons for the Bulldogs (played five games with varsity as a sophomore)…athleticism and a tireless approach made him a force on the boards the last two seasons, but he took a much more active role at the offensive end and as a leader in his senior season… averaged team bests in both rebounds (over 13 per game) and scoring (17 ppg)…also a Brockton Enterprise All-Scholastic selection…Mayflower League all-star…consistently dominated against much taller pivotmen this season in the ML…also played football for HHS…has attended several prominent basketball camps…hit the weights hard between his junior and senior seasons…hopes to play college basketball…Clark University is just one of many possible destinations…Holbrook coach Ed Callahan: "Garcell was our unquestioned leader this season. He knew just when to speak up, and the kids really looked up to him…He's extremely passionate about basketball. Hard work and commitment have taken him to the next level."

Bryan Gaine - Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Braintree

Bryan Gaine

Bryan jumped into the starting lineup this winter and wound up leading a very balanced Wamp attack (nine players averaging over six points per game) in both scoring (13.6 ppg) and rebounding (nine per game) to lead the Wamps to a 16-6 season and to the second round of the state tourney…the 6-foot-2 interior player regularly lit up opposing pivotmen who were several inches taller…compensated for relative lack of height with athleticism and deceptive strength…top scoring output was a 33-point explosion versus Weymouth…first team Bay State Conference all-star…named to Braintree Tourney all-star team and was MVP of the annual Sharon Tourney…also a standout in football for BHS…has been recruited to play basketball at Wentworth…is leaning toward majoring in architecture…Braintree coach Bob Crook: "Bryan was definitely our most improved player over the last two years. He could have scored a lot more, but he sacrificed stats for the good of the team and our balanced attack. He did it all for us this year, though, from scoring the tough points inside, to rebounding, to even bringing the ball up when we saw heavy pressure."

Tim Lynch - Senior (Capt.)
Guard - Braintree

This second year starter directed the attack for the 16-6 Wamps this season, averaging 10.5 points and 4.5 assists per game…this natural athlete is a good ballhandler and passer who could also knock down the open shot…at his best when the pressure was on…Bay State Conference second team all-star…also a very good golfer and an outstanding lacrosse player for B.H.S…was a league all-star for lacrosse last season after tallying 97 points in 18 games…will major in Business next year at the Isenberg School of Management at UMass-Amherst, where he also hopes to play Div. 1 collegiate lacrosse… Braintree coach Bob Crook: "Tim was one of those players who relished the opportunity to step up big when the pressure was on. He's a very good all-around player, but what stood out is how when the going got tough, Tim got going. He was also one of the smartest players I've ever coached."

Soccer Club Spring sign-ups extended

Due to the inclement weather last weekend the Cohasset Soccer Club has extended its registration for the spring outdoor soccer program which will begin Saturday, April 12th. Registration is open for players aged 5 (by August 1, 2003) through 10, up through the 4th Grade. Registration for the Club's travel teams with players in Grade 5 or older is closed.

Registration forms are available at the Town Hall. Registrations must be completed and submitted by Friday, April 11th in order to have the new players participate in the spring season beginning on April 12th.

Baseball clinic

Cohasset Recreation Department's South Shore Baseball Camp will provide an April vacation baseball clinic beginning Tuesday, April 22, through Friday, April 25, at Milliken Field.

The clinic runs from noon to 2:30 p.m. and this week-long program will cost $100 per participant.

For more information, call the Recreation office at 781-383-4109. Registration forms can be found at the Recreation office, first floor, Town Hall.

Scheduling updates

With all of the postponements of CHS sporting events forced by inclement weather the last two weeks, Athletic Director Ron Ford is urging parents and fans to check his daily voicemail postings (@781-383-6103) for schedule changes before heading out to an event.

Fundraising

This winter's ticket raffle by the CHS Athletic Boosters raised over $1,800, according to Ron Ford, with all proceeds going to the CHS Athletic budget. The AD wished to express his thanks to Bob and Allison Silvia for all of the work they did on the drive, as well as to Phil Mahoney and Robert Donahue for donating tickets.

This spring, the boosters are kicking off a sale of official CHS blankets ($50 apiece), flags ($45) and beach towels ($20), all with the official Cohasset High banner.

Anyone interested in making a purchase should contact Ron Ford at 781-383-6103 or send a check made out to "Cohasset High School" to Cohasset High School, C/O Ron Ford, AD; 143 Pond St; Cohasset' MA, 02025.

Swinging off course

ished up the seven inning game with 14 errors.

All seven innings of the game were pitched by Cohasset freshman Katey James, who gave up 13 hits and walked eight, with six of the walks coming in the first four innings of the chilly game.

Leading 3-0 in the top of the fourth, Holbrook unloaded for six runs to more-or-less put the game away. Cohasset fought back with three runs of its own in the bottom of the fourth, with freshman Melissa Crowley-Buck sparking the team with a double. She had two runs batted in during the game.

Another top hitter for Cohasset was sophomore Casey Anderson, who went two-for-four. The catcher also batted in two runs. James was two-for-four with two RBI and junior Caitlin Condon was two-for-two with three RBI.

"There's no question inexperience hurt us," said coach Bostwick. "While we may have made 14 errors, they were correctable errors— little things, like not communicating with one another."

Following the season opener, Cohasset softball was basically spent indoors for the last several days, the team playing with a whiffle ball, as the coach sought to correct errors.

The cold weather caused the Cohasset-Norwell game scheduled for Monday to be postponed until a later date.

Tuesday's scheduled game at Mashpee was also postponed. The Lady Skippers are hoping to get in today's game at home against Hull (3:30 p.m. start, Barnes Field).

Last year's Cohasset junior varsity softball team finished the season with an 11-4 record.

As for last Thursday's score, it was Holbrook 24, Cohasset 8.

Boston Men's BaseballLeague seeks players

The Boston Men's Baseball League is accepting registrations for the 2003 season across three age divisions: 18+, 30+ and 40+. To register or with questions, visit www.bostonbaseball.com. If you do not have internet access, you may call 508-358-4550.

The Boston Men's Baseball League is New England's largest amateur baseball league, with 63 teams last year. Players of all ages and skill sets can compete, as there are 3 age divisions (18+, 30+ and 40+) as well as conferences based on ability.

A 26-game schedule is played, beginning the weekend of April 26-27 and ending in September. We play every weekend, plus one weeknight game per week. There will be a tryout end-March/early-April (date TBD), but registrations are being accepted now.

Teams are located in Boston and in the surrounding suburbs.

Cool Running

approximately 650 runners, down from last year's 765— with unseasonably cold weather no doubt factoring in the decision of several area runners to give it a pass.

"This time of year, road races are hit and miss, and, unfortunately, it was a bit of a miss for us this year," offered Coleman Nee, Cohasset's Rotary Club Secretary. "It had been rainy on Saturday, and it was cold on Sunday, with a forecast for snow on Monday. I'm sure that played a part.

"Still, 650 wasn't bad at all, considering. I think the causes we're supporting should get a pretty nice lift when it's all said and done."

The biggest winner on the day was the Polio Foundation, as most of the proceeds from the race went toward the eradication of that crippling disease that still affects children in the poorest of countries. The Cohasset Rotary Club, the longtime sponsors of the Cohasset Rod Race By the Sea, will donate a significant amount of this year's proceeds to the fight against polio, according to Nee.

Eradicating the disease is a cause that Rotary International has supported since 1979 when it launched a five-year immunization program in the Philippines. Today Rotary International continues its commitment to rid the world of polio.

Nee explained there is real hope with continued efforts by the World Health Organization and through groups like Rotary that polio can be completely eliminated by 2006. e said other Rotary clubs in the area are also joining the effort through their own fundraisers.

The race got underway on Sunday at 1 p.m., starting at the Town Common, with the course taking runners down Highland Ave, to Elm Street, to Atlantic Ave., to the coastal end of Jerusalem Road, to Forest Ave., to North Main Street and, finally, back to the Common for the finish. This is considered one of the prettiest running courses on the East Coast, Race Coordinator Peter Guild says.

Guild reported that the registration went "extremely smoothly."

"I think the runners were pretty happy about the way everything ran," said Guild, who went on to laud the efforts of the 60-70 volunteers who helped with registration, traffic control and water handouts.

Cohasset Rotary Club president Damian Grozier explained Rotary International had wanted the world to be polio free by the year 2000. That date proved to be too ambitious so the organization refocused its efforts last year to raise some $80 million to eradicate the disease from the planet by 2006. With Sunday's road race, the Cohasset Rotary launched a three-year effort to raise $10,000 for the cause.

Nee said the Cohasset Rotary will continue to support local programs, such as high school scholarships, Wellspring in Hull and Father Bill's in Quincy. The club has two main fundraisers a year, the race and selling advertisements for the Cohasset Rotary phonebooks. Early efforts on the phone book show an increase in sales over last year.

Nee said seeing what some children who are afflicted with the disease have to go through needlessly was a wakeup call. He said the polio fight is an opportunity for the club, which with 25 members is relatively small, to be part of something really big.

"As a Rotary club we felt obligated to support Rotary's worldwide mission," Nee says. "We viewed this as how often do we get to pitch in globally to help eradicate a disease that continues to be a problem."

Rotary International's efforts to rid polio in affected areas include: public education to promote immunization; getting the vaccine to children in remote regions; forming public-private partnerships that fortify government health programs; and strengthening a global laboratory network to support disease surveillance efforts after polio has been eradicated.

The all-time male Cohasset Road Race by the Sea record is held by Boston's John Kessinger, his 1980 time of 29:30 still standing as the mark to beat 22 years later.

Cohasset's own Sarah Linsley, who won the female race in its first seven years, owns the women's record with her 1983 time of 33:25.

OBITUARIES

Anne D. Muir

Anne D. Muir

Anne D. (Davidson) Muir of Weymouth and formerly of Cohasset, died peacefully following a brief illness on April 3, 2003. She was 91.

Mrs. Muir was an avid sports enthusiast and especially enjoyed playing golf. She played golf from her teens until her mid-80s. She was a member of the Cohasset Golf Club for more than 40 years. During her last weekend, she watched the Players' Championship from start to finish.

She also enjoyed her daily walks. For more than 70 years she walked up to three miles daily. Over those years, she had met hundreds of people who became accustomed to seeing her on her various walking routes.

Mrs. Muir was the devoted wife of the late George Muir II and leaves her three children, Heather Muir of Weymouth, George Muir III of Weymouth and Craig Muir of Cohasset; and her seven grandchildren and three great-grandchildren of whom she was immensely proud.

A memorial service was held at the Second Congregation Church in Cohasset on April 9. Interment was private.

Funeral arrangements were made by the McNamara - Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Donations may be sent in Mrs. Muir's memory to the Second Congregation Church, Highland Street, Cohasset 02025.

Patty Beth Desmond

Patty Beth Desmond

Patti Beth (Patrolia) Desmond, a homemaker, of Quincy and formerly of Cohasset, died April 4, 2003 at her sister's home in Marshfield following a three-month battle with cancer. She was 44.

Born in Weymouth, she is the daughter of Ted and Mary (McDermott) Patrolia of Cohasset. She attended Cohasset schools and was a graduate of Cohasset High School, Class of 1976 and a graduate of Quincy College.

She lived in Cohasset 22 years and in New Bedford for several years. She was a volunteer at the Sun Light House in Scituate working with the blind and with cerebral palsy patients for many years.

With her parents, Patti leaves her son, Dennis P. Desmond of Quincy; her three sisters, MariClare Cheney of Marshfield, Nora Kohler of Hull and Rebecca Tabaczynski of Lexington; her five brothers, Mark of Hingham, Martin of Dedham, Kevin of Norwell, Timothy of Cohasset and Daniel Patrolia of Stoughton; and several nieces and nephews, aunts and uncles.

A funeral service was held April 9 at the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Interment was in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

Teresa N. Maurer

Teresa N. (Browne) Maurer of Cohasset, a homemaker, died April 3, 2003 at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

Born in Boston, Mrs. Maurer lived in Milton before moving to Cohasset 30 years ago.

She and her husband were members of the K-Bar Square Dance Club in Weymouth. Mrs. Maurer also had a love for animals.

She leaves her husband of 53 years, Louis H. Maurer, Sr.; her three daughters, Barbara A. O'Driscoll of Quincy, Gail F. Oliveira of Westchester, Pa., and Maryellen Carney of Bellingham; her two sons, Louis H. Maurer, Jr. of Whitman and Paul A. Maurer; and her eight grandchildren. She was the mother of the late John T. Maurer.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at the Church of the Resurrection in Hingham. Interment will be at a later date. Funeral arrangements were made by the Pyne Keohane Funeral Home of Hingham.

Dorothy L. McDonald

Dorothy L. (Kinlin) McDonald, formerly of Scituate, a retired Cohasset schoolteacher, died March 28, 2003, at home in Hingham after a long illness.

Mrs. McDonald taught for 28 years at the Deer Hill Elementary School in Cohasset.

She graduated from Bridgewater State College, where she also earned a master's degree in education. She grew up in Hyde Park and moved to Scituate to raise her family.

She leaves four children, Kathie McDonald of North Andover, Caryl (McDonald) Luciani of Scituate, Dr. James McDonald of East Falmouth and Francis McDonald of Centerville; and eight grandchildren.

A remembrance service and brunch was held at the Satuit Boat Club, Scituate.Donations may be made to Hospice of the South Shore, 100 Bay State Drive, Braintree 02185.

South Shore ARC honors Dick Frye

By Dorothy Malcolm – Bunyard

Richard Frye, center, receives the South Shore ARC's "Appreciation Award to the Frye Agency" from Dave Calhoun, executive director of SSARC, left, and from Leo Sarkissian, executive director of the Massachusetts ARC, right.

South Shore Country Club was hopping Friday night, April 4 as Braintree businessman and philanthropist Richard Frye received an award from South Shore ARC (SSARC, formerly known as the Association for Retarded Citizens) for his years of volunteerism and wide-ranging contributions.

Executive Director of South Shore ARC, Dave Calhoun referred to Frye as "Our number one advocate." Frye was awarded the distinction to a local business active in SSARC, its "Appreciation Award" dedicated to the Frye Agency for 2003.

As president and owner of the Frye Real Estate & Insurance Agency in Braintree, Frye has been involved with SSARC for 30 years in various capacities.

"A friend of mine had a daughter who had developmental disabilities," Frye said in a conversation at his real estate and insurance headquarters at 1579 Washington St., Braintree. "My friend invited me to a charity function and it just took off from there — I was hooked. When I came on board with SSARC, we had one room at Immaculate Conception Church in Weymouth. This was 30 years ago and back then, it was a grassroots effort."

Frye continued, "Then in the early 1980s, the state came out with mandatory licensing which was the best thing that could happen for the clients and the agency. And now we're in much better shape because we've paid attention to the bottom line. And that has benefited everyone, especially our ARC clients."

"Now we have living facilities for our clients in Braintree, Weymouth, Scituate, Hingham and Milton, life skills are taught, making them productive and highly employable — in fact, we hire our own clients to do administrative work at our headquarters at Webb Memorial Park in Weymouth."

The recipient of countless humanitarian awards, Frye has left his benevolent mark all over the South Shore. Aside from his community service, which is a hallmark of his life's work, he is one of the most successful businessman on the South Shore, now celebrating 50 years in the real estate and insurance industry.

"I've been in this business a long time," said Frye. "Insurance is going very well but I really enjoy the real estate and development side of my business."

He purchased 75 acres of prime real estate land in Sandwich on Cape Cod and developed more than 60 lots into a gracious estate of quietly-elegant homes. The houses sit on one to two-and-a-quarter verdant acres of prime, conservation land — a rarity on the Cape these days.

"Yes, Pimlico Pond Estates is committed to enhancing and maintaining the natural beauty and conservation of this community. It's been a worthwhile effort and I've enjoyed it and at last count, I believe we have four lots left." Frye said.

"There's nothing like community," Frye said. "Community business and operation. Over the years, people have been pushed onto the fast track with disconnected solutions for customer service and other impersonal methods of conducting themselves and their businesses. There's a lot of people in the community who do a good job and who really care about their community."

African stories for grades 1-3

This Friday, April 11 at 10 a.m. The Enchanted Circle Theater will perform a storytelling production entitled "African Griot: Keeper of the Oral Tradition" to Osgood's first-, second- and third-grade students. This program consists of two stories told in Griot (historical African storyteller style).

The first story, "Dream", is an original play written by Guinea artist Muhammad Khassaly Diallo. It is the story of Fatou, a young African girl struggling with the fear of failure. Fatou learns to believe in herself after an exquisite dream where she frees a wild bird to fly, escapes hungry hyenas and becomes as brave as a N'gayu (lion). Live percussion, song, dance, a baobob tree, beautiful masks and interpreted Pular (one of the languages of Guinea) highlight this production.

The second story, "The Evening Gift", is an Ashanti tale from Ghana (based on the book Anansi the Spider retold by Gerald McDermott) and tells of how the moon came to be in the sky. In this tale, Anansi gets into trouble and it takes all six of his sons to save him when he is swallowed by a giant fish and stolen by a flying falcon. Once free, Anansi finds a globe of light in the forest and brings it home as a gift for one of his sons. In the end, Nyame places the moon in the sky as a gift for all to see.

There will be a brief intermission between the two stories in which students will have the opportunity to learn some African words, rhythms and songs.

Betsy Ogden and Ann McCarthy, Osgood's art teacher and librarian, have worked closely together to help incorporate African art and literature in their classes these last few weeks. Osgood's second- and third-grade students have made beautiful murals inspired by African folktales and proverbs that will decorate the gym for this performance.

Sandcastles enrollment

Sandcastles ChildCare, Preschool & Private Kindergarten, serving children 8 weeks to 6 years announces open enrollment for our Infant, Pre-toddler, Toddler, Preschool, Pre-K and Private Kindergarten programs for ages 8 weeks to 6 years. Sandcastles offers excellent teacher pupil ratios with constructive activities to help children acquire new skills, broaden their interests and improve their abilities. Programs involve fun and learning through a combination of educational programs and activities such as swimming lessons, field trips, beach trips, museum trips, Music Circus trips and weekly visits from the Music Lady.

SSL scholarship

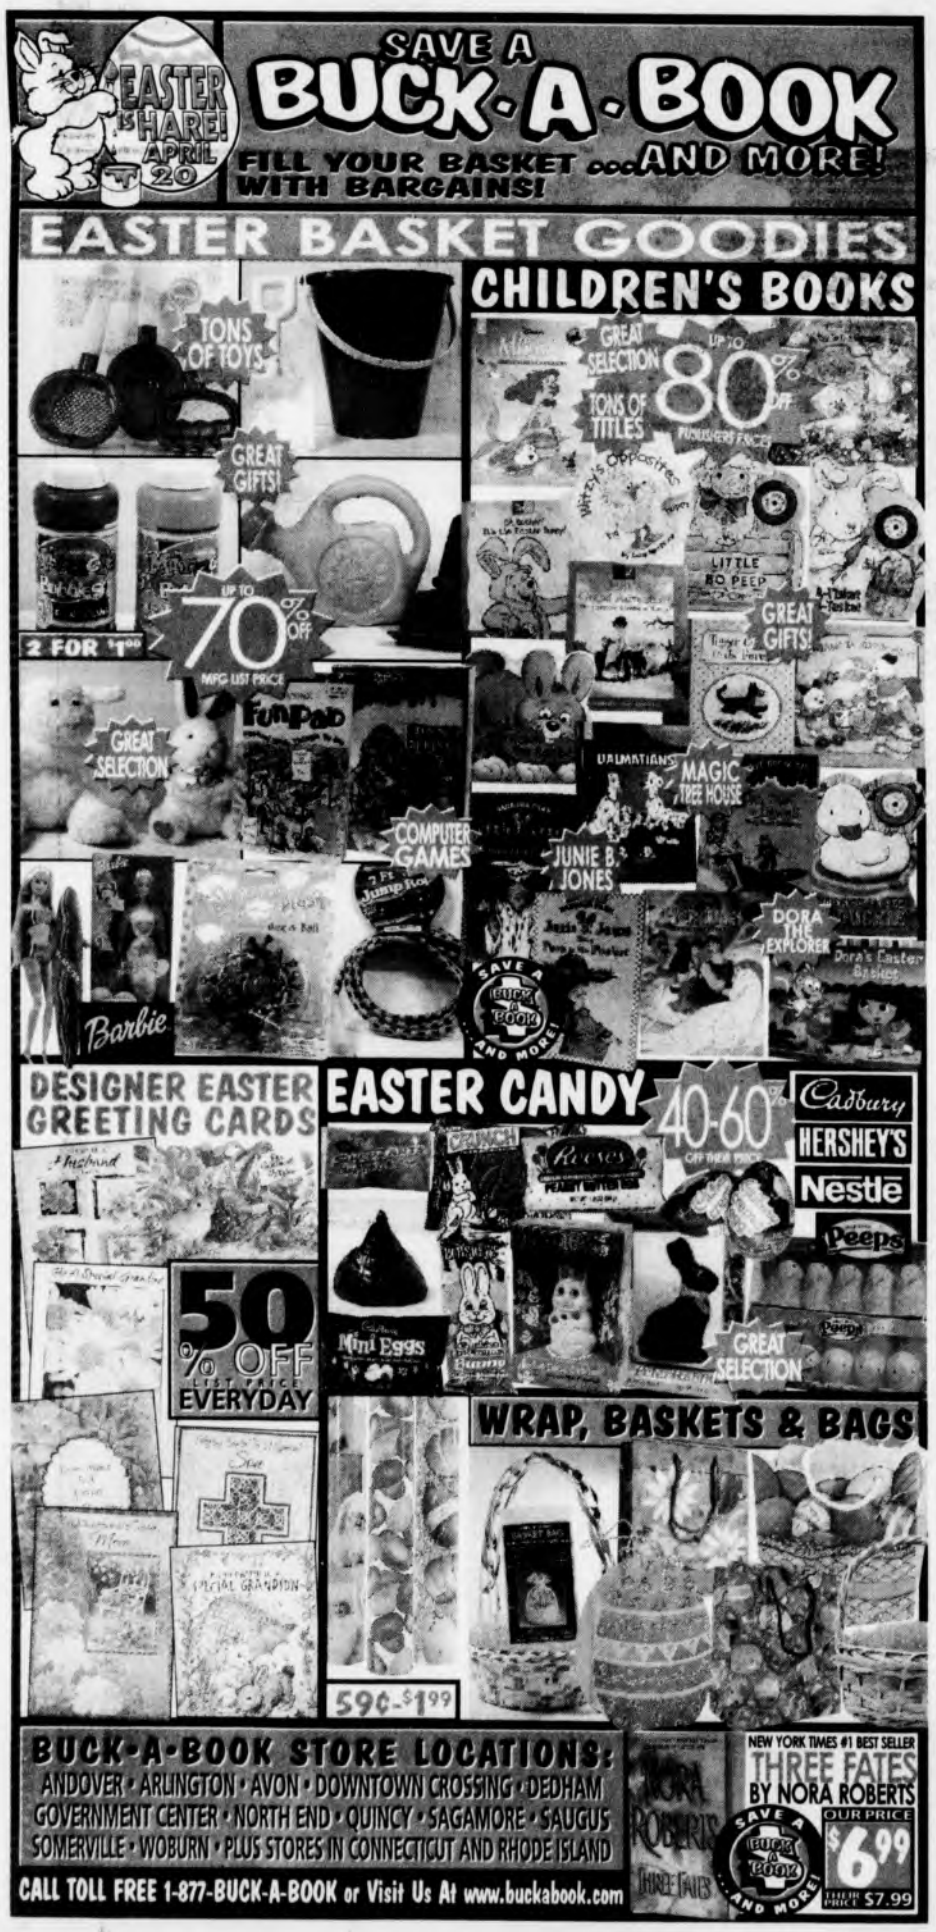
The Social Service League of Cohasset is accepting applications for the Margaret F. Loud, R.N. Scholarship. Applicants must be high school seniors, residents and intend to begin or further their studies in nursing, social work, or allied health fields. Two scholarships in the amount of $1,000 will be awarded for the 2003-2004 academic year. Applications are available at the League office, 16 Highland Ave. weekdays from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. or in the town's high school guidance office. Applications must be received at the League office by April 18.

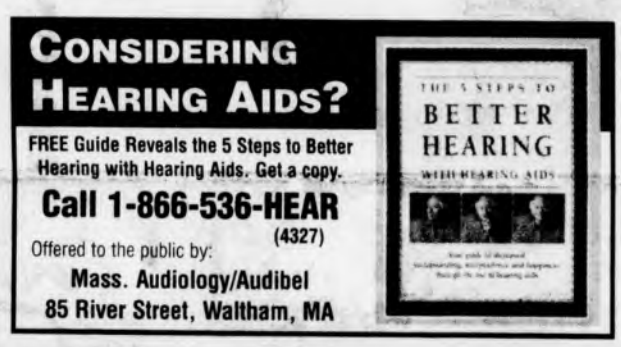
Swim-dive team offers scholarship

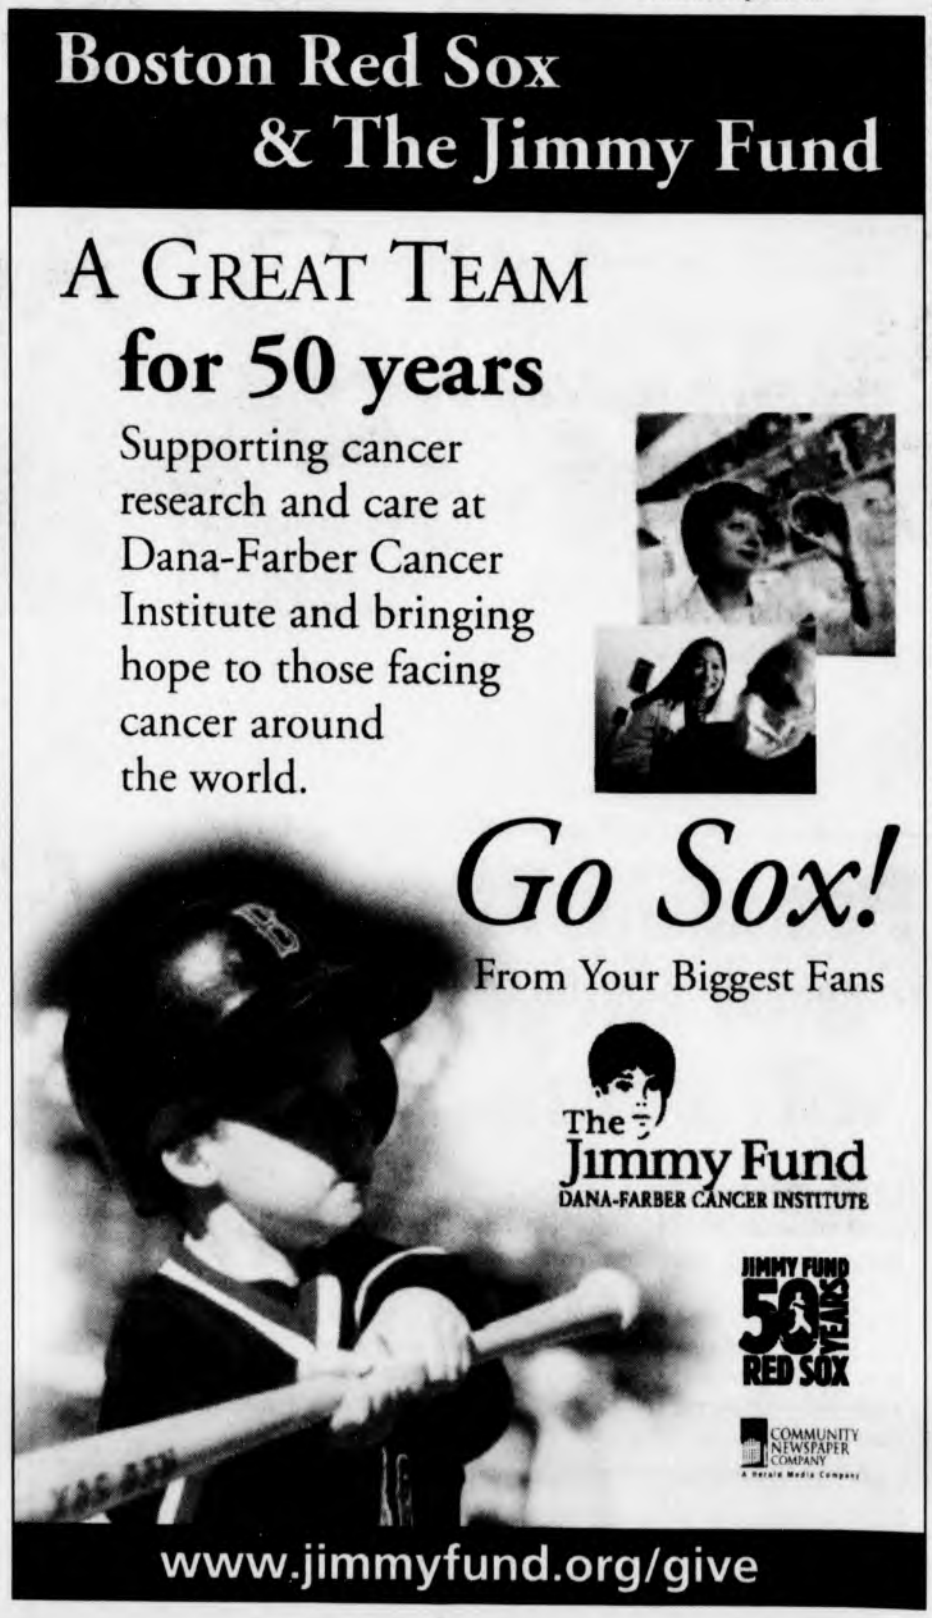
The Cohasset Swim and Dive Team is offering a scholarship. An applicant must be a high school senior and have been a member of the Cohasset Swim-Dive Team for five years. All portions of the application must be completed and postmarked no later than April 28.

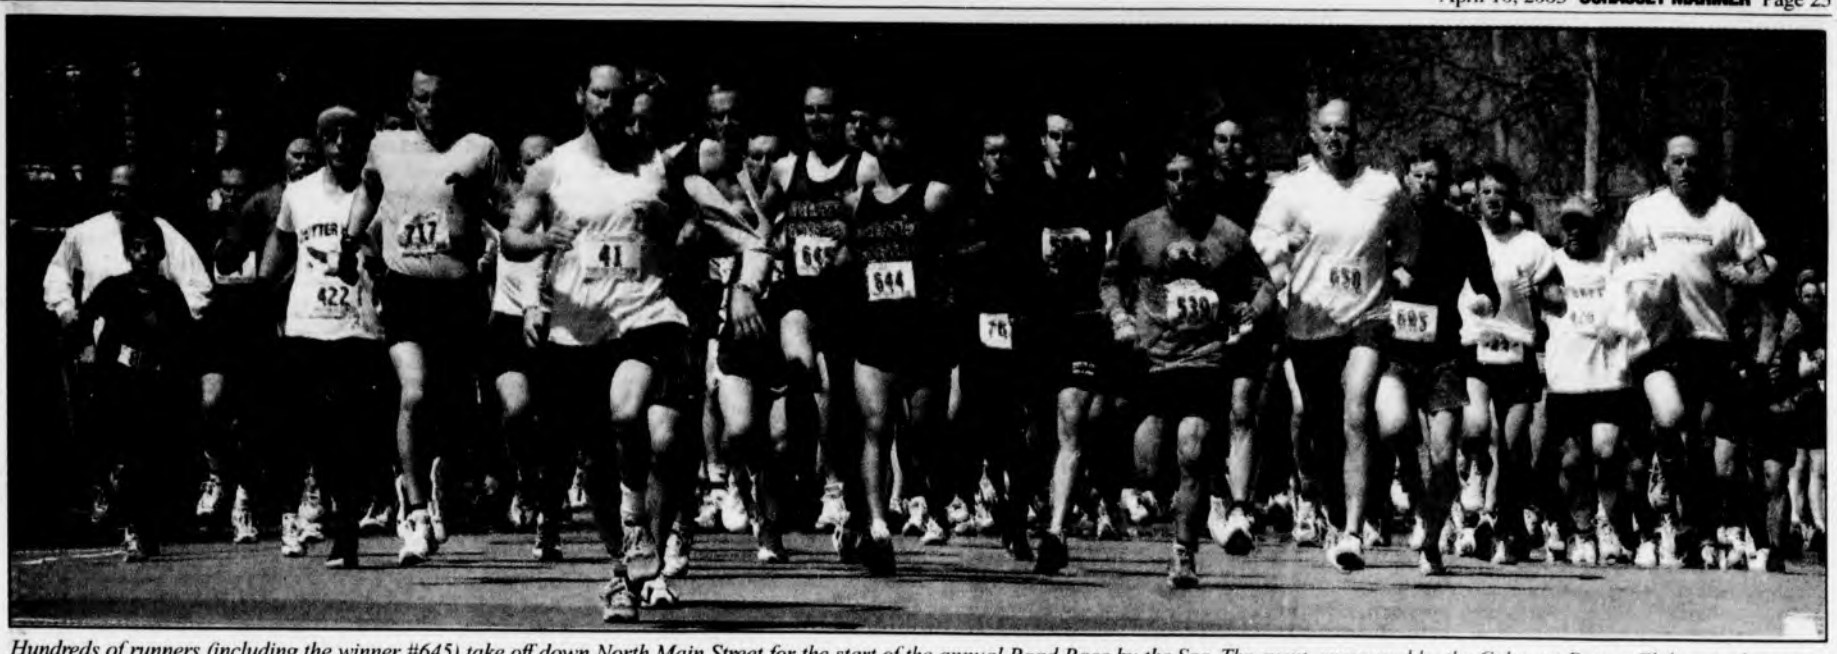
Questions about the scholarship application process should be directed to Irene Volpe Barry, Cohasset Swim/Dive Team Scholarship Committee at 383-1605.

Applications may be picked up in the Cohasset High School Guidance Department.









Hundreds of runners (including the winner #645) take off down North Main Street for the start of the annual Road Race by the Sea. The event, sponsored by the Cohasset Rotary Club, raised money to help eradicate polio.

Spring Fling:

How to spend one million dollars in four hours

By Lisa Roach
THE BACK BAY COURANT

I've just been given a woman's dream assignment: spend $1 million in four hours. It's a lot harder than you think. Really.

My mission had boundaries. I could only buy things that I could wear or carry such as clothing, handbags, luggage, jewelry and shoes.

A sense of overwhelming responsibility came over me; when you have this much money to spend, you have to choose wisely. A budget like this only comes around once for someone like me, so I had to choose timeless things that will still look great when I pull them out 20 years from now.

I plotted my course carefully: Newbury Street, then Copley Place.

Time Check: 00:00

Knowing that I only had a short amount of time, my first purchase was expensive jewelry. I wanted only the best, so off I went to Dorfman for the major purchase.

I found the most exquisite pink sapphire ring with diamond baguettes. Very J Lo. It is a stunning 13.5 carat sapphire with diamond baguettes. I wanted it. Oh yeah, that's right — I can buy it.

Next, the lovely Mrs. Dorfman helped me pick out a set including diamond earrings, a diamond necklace and bracelet. Grand total: about half a million.

Okay, I thought, half the challenge out of the way — in about 20 minutes.

Time Check: 00:20

Next I walked towards the park, took a right on Arlington and headed for Hermes. The reason I am going to Hermes is very simple, and any woman would do the same to get the Birkin, the bag of all bags (not the shoes). I put my name on a list to order the bag. I also picked up the lovely Hermes Kelly bag, a few other baubles, a scarf and a tie for Stewie (my other half).

Time Check: 00:40

Next door at Anne Fontaine, I picked out a must-have white blouse for spring — the "Cecile" which will really go with everything.

On to Shreve, Crump & Low for his-and-hers watches — a Cartier Tank franaise in 18k white gold with diamond sides for those dressy watch occasions, and a Roger Dubois bi-retrograde moon-face with an alligator band. I choose number 24 in the series.

Next was the wedding ring upgrade. Don't get me wrong. I love my rings, but they could be a little larger. Since I have a million bucks to spend, and I'm still not close to the grand total, why not? I picked out a 5.38-carat Boston ring which is a three-stone ring set in platinum. Perfect and timeless.

After I left Shreve's, I decided to walk up Newbury Street and check out what Burberry had to offer. They too had just what I was looking for: the most perfect "chalk" white trench coat for those early spring days, a white cotton shirt dress that is the perfect dress and plaid rubber flip flops.

Time Check: 02:00

I cross Newbury Street and enter Chanel. I've never owned anything Chanel in my life, so here was my opportunity for the Chanel experience, the Chanel look. I found a beautiful Mousseline jacket with a tweed lining, in pink, a longer version in tweed and a pair of slingbacks in black and tan that literally you could wear with jeans (which I'm about to buy) or anything else. I can wear these jackets forever, and they will never go out of style.

In the pink

Fresh new hues in makeup add face value

By Lauren Beckham Falcone
BOSTON HERALD

The first blush of spring will be on everyone's cheeks this season, thanks to the makeup industry's fascination with pink and peach.

From bold fuchsia to subtle rose, lips and cheeks are sporting a flushed look.

"This season is all about self-expression through color," said Keri Blair, senior artist with the M.A.C. pro team in New York City. "The shades run the gamut, so there's something for everyone, no matter what your age or skin tone."

For the lips and cheeks, pink is paramount, Blair said, but not to the point where it's distracting.

"It's not like your cheeks will walk into the room before you do," she said. "Most of our blushes are cream color-based and translucent, to make you look like you just finished playing tennis."

Lips also will kiss up to a bolder look this spring. M.A.C.'s pink Pop Mode gloss gives a rosy shine; Calvin Klein's opaque gloss will give your pout a more natural glow.

Laura Mercier, who recently showed her spring makeup line French Riviera at Neiman M Boston, was in the stucco h and sunsets southern Franc "I'm seek lots of war tones — peach- es, corals, hints of turquoise — that are reminiscent of Mediterranean glamour," Mercier said. "The colors are very sheer, so the look is very natural and sun-kissed. To achieve a sun-kissed look, it's important to remember you don't have to sit in the sun."

As for eyes, think subtle color.

"Calvin Klein's line is ocean-inspired, with lots of whites and blues, liquids and powders," said cosmetics spokeswoman Lisa Aurichio. "It's a new glistening sheen."

But don't go out and buy a whole new makeup set, experts warned.

"A woman doesn't have to use the entire collection," Mercier said. "Just a few products can update her look."

Just imagine...

Let spring's fantasy fashions take you away

By Jill Radsken
BOSTON HERALD

It's been a tough winter, the economy is dragging and we're fighting a war ... anybody out there need an escape? Luckily, this year's crop of spring fashions offers women a magic-carpet ride to happier places and times: tiny tops for the beach; tennis skirts for the country club; mandarin shirts for a trip to the Far East; or vintage looks for the time traveler.

If retro's your thing, just choose your time period. From '50s-flavored dresses to Victorian-style blouses and skirts, designers are offering vintage looks with modern appeal. The season's lovely flowing chiffon dresses and skirts are timeless.

Cinched dresses and miniskirts will draw all eyes to your waist and legs this spring. Cargo pants, cropped and tied just above the ankle, step out as the fashion-forward trouser.

The spring color palette ranges from brights to pastels, and floral prints and polka dots abound.

Need help planning your fashion getaway for spring? Let's go...

Accessories

Designed for any budget

By Lauren Beckham Falcone

Maybe the outfit is out of reach — too small, too big, too expensive. Or perhaps you want just a little something to add to your ever-expanding wardrobe. Whatever the case, the must-have accessories this spring are shoes, bags and jewelry. And we've found something to fit everyone's price range.

SHOES: Bright colors are a must; mules and strappy stilettos rule; jewels and embellishments will tickle your fancy.

High-end: Devora by Manolo Blahnik. This anything-but-basic-black stiletto sandal with a tulip-inspired heel will put a little spring in your step, $515; Neiman Marcus, Copley Place, Boston.

Moderate: Butterflies are free to fly this spring, and Stuart Weitzman is right on top of the trend. Try the red Papillon, $198; Stuart Weitzman, Copley Place, Boston.

A real deal: Be jeweled and bedazzled by Nine West's Struggle mule, $60; Nine West stores nationwide.

BAGS: Bags for spring are overstuffed, with hobo bags leading the pack. The color of choice: White is hot.

High-end: Hey, we'll be waiting a long time for spring, so don't let Louis Vuitton's waiting list get you down. Try the Takeshi Murakami bag that's sure to courage your. Sure, it'll take at least three months until delivery, but patience pays off.

Retro Cherry Blossom, $965; Louis Vuitton, Copley Place, Boston.

Moderate: Leave the straw baskets on your bike and pick up a straw bag with white-leather trim by Coach instead, $228; Coach stores nationwide.

A real deal: When you want a bag that doesn't cost more than you have in your wallet, head on over to T.J. Maxx for a distressed-denim hobo bag, $6.99.

JEWELRY: Go for big, chunky pieces with a Caribbean feel. Think freshwater pearls and semiprecious stones.

Stylin' for guys

Expert advice on building a fresh look for spring

By Jill Radsken
BOSTON HERALD

Most guys don't give a lot of thought to what they wear — hey make the same, safe choices. After all, boring is better than bizarre, right?

Wrong. Among the new collections for spring, there are stylish, wearable clothes that won't make you do a double take — or let you wimp out. For men who don't feel comfortable going from "whatever" to "wow" in a single bound, here are three steps toward a better wardrobe:

STEP 1: Get into the dressing room. Clothes "look so much better on the person" than on a mannequin, said Stuart Segel, vice president of merchandising for Mr. Sid's in Newton. If you're willing to part with a little more money, shop where you can get some guidance.

STEP 2: Start small. Try jazzing up an ordinary dress shirt with a cool pair of cuff links. Alan Gibeley, of Giblees in Danvers, recommends a dress shirt with a two-button collar — and no tie — for a stylish but subtle statement.

STEP 3: Seek inspiration. It's what women do all the time: When you notice someone who looks good, note what he's wearing. Find out where he shops or what designers he favors, and try the look out for yourself. To get you started, we talked to two well-dressed Boston men who have more shopping sense than many of Newbury Street's female veterans. Both Ambassador Charles Stith and KISS 108's Billy Costa say they shop only when they need something ... of course, they usually "need" something every other week.

STEP 4: Go for it. Sometimes the only way to break out of a fashion rut is to try a new look. Said Segel: "It's a mentality. Occasionally, I have to force myself to get into something new and fresh."

Guys, it's not too late to pull yourself together. Here's your chance to find out more about the trends in menswear this spring, and learn what gets our two cover guys — Stith and Costa — to pull out the plastic.

BU's stylish Stith in class all his own

Many believe Ambassador Charles Stith is the best-dressed man in Boston. Stith, an ordained minister who served as ambassador to Tanzania during the Clinton administration, says his mother deserves much of the credit for his sense of style.

"My mom always paid attention to the things we wore," he said.

On most days, Stith wears a suit to his office at Boston University, where he is director of BU's African Presidential Archives and Research Center. He favors blue or gray, but sometimes opts for brown. His tastes lean toward Alexander Julian shirts, Oxxford suits and shoes made in England.

In fashion circles, Stith might be known best for his hand-tied bow ties. He got his first one from a friend 30 years ago, and now enjoys hunting for them in the many cities to which his job takes him. It's one style trait he might not succeed in passing on to the next generation of Stiths: He jokingly complains that his son, Percy, has rebelled and favors traditional ties.

A bargain-lover, Stith said he has so many clothes that he puts some garments away for years at a time. When he reactivates them, his wife, Dr. Deborah Prothrow-Stith, accuses him of buying something new.

"It's justification for her to buy something new," he said.

His look: Distinctive without being dramatic.

Fashion retail experience: In his youth, he sold women's shoes at Stix Baer & Fuller, a department store, in St. Louis, where he grew up. He also worked at JC Penney there.

Fashion connection: Stith and his wife are close friends with menswear designer Alexander Julian. They are godparents to Julian's daughter, Lucy.

Favorite places to shop: London for shoes, linen pocket squares, bow ties and cuff links. "It's a man's town," he said. In Boston, he haunts Filene's Basement.

Latest fashion move: Stith is going old-school, sporting a button-down shirt, tie and cap, on the golf course.

Radio reporter Costa broadcasts casual flair

Shopping is a favorite ritual for Bill Costa, entertainment reporter for WXKS-FM. He does it almost every other week, but when he buys, he sticks to the familiar.

"I probably have 25 pairs of black pants and 30 pairs of khakis. They all look identical," he said.

Most of Costa's wardrobe, worn for public appearances and at work, is dressy-casual. He prefers his clothes slightly baggy, and dons a jacket only for TV appearances. Most days you'll find him in a silk shirt or jersey top. Color? Well, almost everything he wears is an earth tone.

His sense of style began to emerge in high school, when Costa would show up for class at Cambridge High and Latin in worsted-wool suits and topcoats, bought with the money he made working at J Press in Harvard Square.

"I was a dirt-poor kid. I had holes in my shoes, but I wore worsted-wool suits," he said. The approach worked: He was voted Best Dressed every year of high school.

For years, Costa bought all of the top designer lines, but now says he's a smarter shopper.

"I started feeling stupid. I was never a bargain hunter, but now I will go when there are sales," he said. "I can't believe I was getting ripped off for all those years."

His look: Casual. For TV, he favors jackets and knit tops or silk shirts.

Fashion retail experience: J Press in Harvard Square. He worked his way up from mail clerk to salesman during his freshman year of high school.

Favorite places to shop: Giblees in Danvers for Tommy Bahama and Hugo Boss; the Joseph Abboud department at Bloomingdale's.

Latest fashion move: Sticking with his old favorites. "I still have a thick corduroy jacket. I still have that because I'm convinced that it's going to look good again."

Why he doesn't take many fashion risks: "When you're really, really in, nobody else knows. So the danger you run is that you're wearing something that may or may not come into style the next year."

If I had a million dollars

Next I shop for more jewelry, as my total expenditure is only around $700,000 so far.

A beautiful trend for spring is the brooch. At Firestone and Parsons which is known for antique jewelry, I find a magnificent art deco brooch set in platinum with diamonds and a South Sea Pearl necklace with a pav≥ diamond clasp I've craved since I was in my early 20s.

Time Check: 02:45

Jogging up Newbury Street, I jump into Intermix to say hello to Vanessa and Mora and pick out a Stella McCartney jacket that will go with anything, a pair of Seven jeans and a few T-shirts.

Crossing Dartmouth Street, I land at Copley Place with approximately $300,000 to spend and only an hour left in which to do it.

Time Check: 03:00

I'm exhausted and don't know how much more I can do, but as any woman with more shopping to do does, I muster the strength, order a latte and keep moving.

I stop at Gucci, my favorite place to shop. Their spring line is amazing, and their handbags are the best. Among the items I choose are a yellow "Colbert" handbag with a horn handle and a finished crocodile bag, also with horn handle, in a beautiful cranberry color. I also find the perfect pair of leather pants, an olive green satin knee length skirt and matching T-shirt with ruffle trim and a black strapless silk cocktail dress.

Purchasing a full set of luggage, the monogram series at Louis Vuitton plus a few smaller bags, is next on my list. I then head to Kim's where you can have a jacket, dress or pants made in beautiful Chinese silk. I selected a green dragon pattern and had a jacket and a shawl made.

Time Check: 03:30

With only 30 minutes and plenty of money to spare, I walk to Neiman Marcus to spend the rest. Upstairs at the fur salon, I choose a full-length sable fur in Barguzin (a natural brown color) and a short mink jacket in a beautiful creamy tan color that will work with just about everything in my new million-dollar closet.

With almost $150,000 left, I opt for more jewelry and shoes, choosing a Chopard 18k gold love bracelet, 3-carat diamond stud earrings, a 3-carat diamond pendant and a few pairs of Manolos and Prada shoes.

Time Check: 04:00

I'm finished. Now all I need to do is find someone who will loan me 20 bucks so I can pay the parking attendant at the Ritz.

The Temptations Review featuring Dennis Edwards.

Forever a 'Temptation'

Dennis Edwards rocks Memorial Hall April 11

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Dennis Edwards sang lead on more hits by "The Temptations" than both David Ruffin and Eddie Kendricks combined during an on-and-off tenure with the group that began 35 years ago when he replaced Ruffin. Edwards was still surprised, however, when in 1989 the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame chose to induct him alongside the legendary Motown vocal group's original members — Otis Williams, Melvin Franklin, Paul Williams, Ruffin and Kendricks.

"I still remember reading in the newspaper that 'The Temptations' were voted in on the first ballot for induction in the Hall of Fame. I was so pleased for them that I called both Eddie and David to congratulate them. A little while later, I received a telegram informing me that I would also be inducted with them. It was the first time that a non-original member of any group was inducted. I was thrilled to be included, because it showed me that my peers were still thinking of me. Being inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame was definitely the highlight of my career," Edwards recalled earlier this week by telephone from St. Louis.

When he takes the stage at Plymouth Memorial Hall this Friday night, Edwards, 60, will be singing all "The Temptations" hits from the songs he helped make famous like "Ball of Confusion," "Cloud Nine," "Just My Imagination," "Can't Get Next to You" and "Papa Was A Rolling Stone" to early "Temps" hits like "My Girl" and "Ain't Too Proud to Beg."

Being inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame was definitely the highlight of my career."
Temptations singer
Dennis Edwards

Backed by a band and four back-up singers and dancers, the singer's current group is called "The Temptations Review featuring Dennis Edwards." The title may be lengthy, but it is not unimportant.

For years, Edwards fought in and out court for the right to use varying forms of the name "Temptations." In early 1999, he lost his court battle. Despite his many contributions to the success of "The Temptations," a federal judge permanently barred Edwards from performing under the group's name. Edwards also was ordered to pay $50,000 to Temptations leader Otis Williams and the estate of the late Temptations member Melvin Franklin. The court also prohibited Edwards from using such names as "The New Temptations", "The Knew Temptations", and "Dennis Edwards, Lead Singer for the Legendary Temptations". The court order allowed Edwards to describe his group as "Dennis Edwards and The Temptations Review", or "The Temptations Review featuring Dennis Edwards." The suit was filed by Williams, an original member of The Temptations. The name, "The Temptations" is a registered trademark owned by Williams and the estate of Melvin Franklin.

"There are two sides to show business — the show and the business. I've got a bunch of young guys with me now who are willing to listen, learn and just do a great job. We love to get up on stage, perform and make people happy. Off-stage is another story, that's where the business comes in," explains Edwards. "I love Otis Williams. It is our management teams that don't get along. The whole situation was just very unfortunate. If Otis and I had talked things out, without our legal teams, we'd probably still be together. Some day, I hope to perform with Otis again."

Local, and not-so-local color

Mary Callahan shows watercolor works at Dolphin Gallery

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Marshfield painter Mary Callahan finds artistic inspiration both at home and away. Some of the more impressive results of the artist's ventures are on view in her one-person show, "Home and Away," in the Dolphin Gallery at Hingham Public Library through April 25.

The show continues the ongoing series of local area exhibits, at Hingham Library and elsewhere, spotlighting featured members of the Marshfield-based North River Arts Society.

Watercolors are the sole focus of Callahan's Dolphin Gallery show, while the artist also specializes in oils and acrylics. She is also a watercolor instructor at Cohasset's South Shore Art Center as well as NRAS, and has exhibited in numerous solo and group throughout the South Shore and Boston and even at the 1997 Allied Artists of America National Exhibition in New York, where her work was awarded a silver medal.

"Home and Away" is a pleasant, unassuming collection of watercolors painted from Callahan's own South Shore home and surroundings to picturesque neighborhoods in South Boston to the classic Italian scenery of Tuscany and Rome. Stylistically, the artist describes herself as a modern day Impressionist who names Paul Cezanne and John Singer Sergeant among her favorite painters.

Marshfield painter Mary Callahan's work "L Street Tavern - Waiting for Will" is one of several water colors on display in her "Home and Away" show now on display through April 25 at the Dolphin Gallery of the Hingham Public Library.

"Whether the subject of my painting is a landscape I have visited in my travels, a view of my garden, or a still life I have arranged, my objective is to point out to the viewer something of beauty which might have been overlooked at a casual glance. My aim is to do this in a free, expressive and unique way," says Callahan in an artist statement.

From the "Home" portion of the show, there's a number of floral and botanical still lifes that appear as though they could have been produced in the artist's own Marshfield home studio or backyard, with fine impressionistic tones of light and shade. There are also such odd items as the tranquil, red-sunset beach landscape of "Sailor's Delight," presumably drawn from a local area scene.

A possible favorite among viewers in the entire show, however, is the quaint urban neighborhood scenery of "L Street Tavern — Waiting for Will." Callahan again applies her light and shade touches to give the street corner Southie bar an inviting flavor in this piece, so subtitled in tribute to the bar's on-location use for several scenes shot in the movie "Good Will Hunting." The neighborhood pub was also reportedly a pre-stardom hangout for "Good

Schumacher gets the call

Versatile director teams with Colin Farrell on 'Phone Booth'

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

The new thriller "Phone Booth" endured a casting carousel and two national tragedies, but it finally opened Friday.

Director Joel Schumacher still remembers the reaction he got when he said he wanted to use Colin Farrell in the lead role. The studio's response: Who's that?

That was before Farrell turned into one of the hot young actors, after "Minority Report" and "Tigerland."

The casting of the lead role is crucial to "Phone Booth." It's about a slick publicist who picks up a ringing phone near Times Square, then finds that the call is from a lunatic with a high-powered rifle who tells him not to hang up, or else.

After the studio nixed Farrell, "Jim Carrey's managers called me because he had flirted with [playing the lead in the film] before," remembers Schumacher. "They said if you do it, Jim will do it, because we had done 'Batman Forever' together. But when we talked I said, 'Jim, you can't play shtick here. You've gotta be this very ordinary guy, and tear every layer off you to get to rock bottom.' I could tell he was nervous, but we got up to where he was fitting his suit for the role. Then he called me the next day and said he had cold feet. So I said, 'Don't do this to yourself. Release yourself.' "

Director Joel Schumacher says if he's not scared on the set, he's probably making the wrong movie.

Not only was everything back to Square One, there was much more trouble ahead. The casting question was quickly nipped in the bud when Fox executives saw Farrell's amazing performance in Schumacher's "Tigerland" at the Toronto Film Festival.

"They said, 'OK, we get it. Here's a dollar. Go make it with Colin,' " says Schumacher with a laugh.

"So we made it in December of 2000, and it was supposed to come out in the fall of 2001. But then Sept. 11 happened. And we certainly weren't going to put out a movie about Manhattan at that time, it would've been totally inappropriate. Because nobody knew Colin yet, Fox decided to wait till after 'Minority Report' because he'd be with Tom Cruise and Steven Spielberg and he'd have a profile. So it was going to come out last fall, but then the Beltway sniper happened. And we couldn't come out [then]."

"Phone Booth" is another addition to the diverse Joel Schumacher filmography, which includes "Batman Forever," "8MM," and "A Time to Kill." When the director

Turkey burgers

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Turkey burgers can be about as appealing as low-fat cheesecake – after the first bite, one wonders why anyone would want to transform the national bird into something eaten between halves of a hamburger bun. My initial thoughts were confirmed when I researched recipes that included the oddest ingredients including mango chutney, grated zucchini, poultry seasoning and plenty of filler such as bread crumbs. These burgers don't only strike out in the taste department, but they have a spongy texture somewhere between a chicken nugget and a bad meatball. So how was I going to make a burger that was juicy and tender with a meaty texture and lots of turkey flavor?

The first step was to test dark versus white meat. Ground turkey in preformed patties sits alongside bulk ground turkey with fat percentages of 1 to 2 percent for white meat, 15 percent for dark meat and a ground mixture that is usually about 7 percent. I made patties out of all products including freshly ground thigh, breast, and equal parts of each. Immediately I noticed that the bulk ground turkey is very mushy when raw. It actually has no texture at all and feels like very soft cookie dough—smooth and lightweight. On the other hand, the meat that I had ground coarsely in my processor (after freezing it briefly) felt like real meat. Next, I slapped a few of these home-ground burgers into the skillet and noticed that these burgers didn't shrink or contract — once formed, all of the burgers held their shape. When I compared my homemade turkey burgers to those made with pre-ground meat, the former were clearly rougher in appearance but they also had a real meaty bite and had none of the rubbery, spongy texture that is the bane of this beef substitute. (Ground turkey often lists "natural flavorings" on the label which may contribute to the lack of honest, fresh flavor.) So the winner was the home-ground turkey thigh. At 15 percent fat, it may not be healthfood, but at least it tastes good.

In terms of other ingredients, I tested mushrooms, thyme, parsley, garlic, shallots,onion, soy sauce, Tabasco, lemon juice, and binders such as bread crumbs. The only other ingredients that passed the test were mustard, Worcestershire sauce, salt and pepper.

As far as cooking goes, turkey burgers do very well cooked in a skillet or the grill. They have to be done over medium to medium-low heat in order to get a nice brown crust on the exterior and fully cooked inside. Unless using a non-stick pan, you do need a bit of oil to prevent sticking. The burgers are well browned on the first side, which takes about 5 to 6 minutes. Once they are flipped they again cook over medium heat for about five minutes or until medium brown. Then the heat is lowered and they finish cooking over low heat for another five minutes. Using an instant-read thermometer is a little tricky but can be done through the side, although it's just as easy to prick the burgers with a paring knife to be sure there isn't a trace of pink and the juices run clear. They can be grilled over medium heat in a similar manner. The good news is with either cooking method the ground turkey thighs have enough fat to keep the burgers juicy as they cook all the way through.

REALLY GOOD TURKEY BURGERS

If grinding your meat is not an option, you may substitute bulk ground turkey thighs in the recipe below. Even better, if you happen to have a nice butcher you may be able to have him coarsely grind fresh thigh meat for you. In either case, the resulting burgers won't have the meaty texture of the food processor ground meat but they will be flavorful and juicy. The recipe is easily doubled to accommodate a larger crowd. These burgers are exceptionally good when topped with bacon.

1 1/2 pounds turkey thigh meat from 2 medium thighs, skinned and boned
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon ground black pepper
1 1/2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce
1 teaspoon Dijon mustard
1 tablespoon vegetable oil

1. Cut the thigh meat into 1-inch chunks and arrange in a single layer on a baking sheet. Freeze until semi-firm, about 30 minutes. Working in two or three batches (depending on the size of your machine) place the turkey chunks in the bowl of your processor fitted with a steel blade and pulse until the largest pieces are no bigger than 1/8 inch. Transfer to a medium bowl and add the salt, pepper, Worcestershire sauce and mustard. Mix well, using your hands. Form mixture into four six-ounce patties that are about 1 inch thick.

2. Meanwhile, heat a large heavy-duty skillet over medium heat until hot, about 5 minutes. Add the oil and swirl to evenly coat the bottom. Add the burgers and cook until very well browned, about 5 to 6 minutes. Turn burgers and cook for five minutes or until medium brown. Lower the heat to medium-low and cook until the burgers are well browned and when pricked in the center with the tip of a knife the meat has no trace of pink and the juices run clear, about 5 minutes longer. Serve immediately.

GRILLED VARIATION

Instead of following Step 2 in the above recipe, ignite grill. When fire is medium- low (you can hold your hand about 5 inches over the grill surface for 5 seconds), rub cooking area with oil-soaked paper towel using tongs. Place burgers on grill and cook until very well browned, about 7 minutes. Turn and cook until second side is browned as well, about 7 minutes longer, checking for doneness as stated above.

Schumacher gets the call

is told that none of his films have any particular Schumacher stamp on them, he's thrilled.

"Good. Good," he says. "One of my favorite directors is Billy Wilder. One of the things I love about him is that 'Sunset Boulevard' has nothing to do with 'The Apartment,' which has nothing to do with 'Some Like It Hot,' which has nothing to do with 'Double Indemnity.' You could go on and on because they're all totally different. There are some directors like Alfred Hitchcock and Woody Allen who kind of do variations on the same themes. They're great. I love that. But I feel that if you don't repeat yourself and you try to do a different movie each time, you challenge yourself more. I have a rule — if I'm not scared, I'm doing the wrong movie. Besides if it feels too easy and you say, this is a piece of cake, God goes, 'Heh, heh, heh.'"

Schumacher plans to continue his trend with upcoming projects that could include "On the Road," with Farrell taking on the Dean Moriarty part, and the fourth remake of "A Star Is Born," with Will Smith and Jennifer Lopez. But the only film with a definite green light so far is his production of the Andrew Lloyd Webber musical "Phantom of the Opera," which goes before the cameras in October.

Having mentioned Woody Allen, the question must be put to Schumacher of how he came up with the famous inflatable suit when he served as costume designer on "Sleeper."

"Oh, the hydrovac suit!," he says with glee. "In those days, Woody could make any movie he wanted, but it had to be a comedy, he had to be in it, and it had to be made for $2 million or under. So here we're doing this big sci-fi action comedy, for $2 million, and the costume allowance was $40,000. So the costumes are out of the surplus store, athletic stores; the robots are hockey masks. There's a colander on the head and a piece of a microphone for the mouth. And they're just wearing a rented tux.

"A couple of years ago, there was this thing in the theaters about the greatest moments in film history," he adds. "And I was so proud — one of them is Woody flying in the hydrovac suit across the screen. It was right in there with Ingrid Bergman and Humphrey Bogart saying, 'We'll always have Paris.'"

Will" stars Matt Damon and Ben Affleck.

Moving to the show's "Away" portion, certainly the most elaborate of the entries is "Tuscan Memories," a nine-panel work which displays its variety of splendid rural scenes of Tuscany in eloquent form. The piece offers a feast of sunlit green in subjects of the sorts that have been perennial artists' favorites.

Other single landscape scenes also highlight Callahan's Tuscany and Rome travels. Rural and urban village pieces such as "Chianti Hillside," "Looking East, Prumiano" and "Flower Market, Rome" again showcase the artist's emphasis on luminous sunlight-color effect in the Impressionist tradition.

Sow and grow your own garden

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

High above the emerging gardens in the stark, bare branches of a grand old cherry tree, the familiar call of a brilliant, scarlet red cardinal resonates on the crisp morning air. From a distance, a faint reply drifts across the sun-drenched landscape. The cheerful melodies of these handsome, crested dignitaries offer the promise that all the welcome signs of springtime may soon appear despite the discouraging forecast for more wintry weather.

I pause frequently to enjoy the sights and sounds of spring. Drifts of cheerful crocuses create a colorful tapestry in shades of yellow, white, purple and lavender. In a sunny nook alongside my back stairway, clusters of dwarf bulbous irises (Iris reticulata) fill the air with their sweet perfume. The rich, violet-blue blossoms of these miniature irises paint a stunning picture set against a backdrop of sunny yellow daffodils and saffron-colored crocuses.

Nearby, many dormant perennials are beginning to show signs of life as the brilliant spring sunshine beckons them forth. The fleshy stems of old-fashioned bleeding hearts have emerged from beneath a layer of dark bark mulch, their reddish-pink foliage glowing in the slanted rays of the afternoon sun. Welcome touches of vibrant green foliage have appeared throughout the perennial borders as iris, daylilies and primroses become visible despite this past week's chilly temperatures. A new growing season is underway.

With spring in the air, gardeners yearn to work the soil and nurture their plants. Should dreary weather and soggy soils hamper your spring cleaning efforts outside, sowing seeds indoors may offer a pleasant and rewarding substitute for yard work and may temporarily satisfy your irrepressible urge to cultivate the soil.

Once the essential supplies for starting seeds have been acquired, including containers, with drainage holes, sterile growing medium, seed packets, and liquid-soluble fertilizer, time should be taken to carefully read the instructions on the seed packets. Reference books offer valuable information on how to treat seeds gathered from your own garden or provide supplemental information to that listed on the packet. Many seeds have special requirements that should be followed to ensure reliable germination.

Nature devises many clever ways to optimize the success and survival of plants. Methods and timing of seed dispersal and internal mechanisms which delay sprouting of those seeds until growing conditions are optimal, are magically orchestrated to ensure maximal rates of germination in the wild. Many plants that are native to cold and sometimes harsh environments like New England produce seeds with protective seed coats that require a period of external influences to ensure spring germination. Were these seeds to require only moisture, they might sprout prematurely and the tender seedlings might succumb to winter chills. To grow these seeds, special steps must be taken to hasten nature's winter-long process. Two commonly practiced methods of seed treatment are known as scarification and stratification.

Scarification is the act of penetrating a seed coat. In nature, a tough outer seed coat might be broken down by the digestive tract of birds or animals. In the soil, microorganisms or the elements of the soil would gradually wear away or soften this outer layer enabling seeds to sprout at an appropriate time. To artificially produce these environmental factors, it is necessary to nick and/or soak these seeds.

Larger seeds with hard outer coats can be nicked with a fingernail file, razor blade, or pocketknife, taking care not to slice into the embryo underneath the covering. Gently rub smaller seeds between two pieces of sandpaper. Penetrating the seed coats will enable moisture to reach the embryo and initiate the germination process. Some types of seeds are best soaked in warm water for a minimum of 24 hours to soften the seed coat, including peas, beans, carrots, corn, beets and spinach. Scarify parsley, false indigo (Baptisia), primroses, and mallows (Hibiscus). Lupines, morning glories, and sweet peas (Lathyrus) are best treated by both means of scarification.

In our northern gardens and the wild, seeds are dispersed throughout the growing season. During the fall and winter months, these tiny miracles are covered by leaf litter, debris or soil and subjected to periods of cold and dampness. Many of these seeds require chilling moisture in order to germinate, a process known as stratification. While all seeds should be stored in a cool, dark location, an additional period of moist chilling just prior to sowing may be necessary. Large seeds, like the shiny black beauties produced by daylilies, can be collected, dried and stored in plastic zipper bags in the refrigerator. Moist seed-growing medium or vermiculite can then be added to the bags for a period of 5 to 6 weeks prior to sowing them in flats. For smaller seeds, sow directly in flats, cover with plastic or glass, and place in a refrigerator, unheated garage, cold frame or directly in the ground in a protected area. Other seeds which require stratification include bleeding heart, aster, bachelor buttons, bee balm, hellebore, columbine, lavender, ornamental cabbage, tall phlox, some primroses, violets, pansies, purple coneflowers, delphinium, snapdragons, black-eyed Susan, and cleome. Many of these only require 2 or 3 weeks of cold, so your entire refrigerator does not need to be transformed into a garden plot and successive sowings could be done. Woody plants tend to require longer chilling time intervals than annuals or perennials. Transfer the flats to a warm, sunny location following this period of stratification and watch the miracle unfold!

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

LINEAR AND NON-LINEAR THINKING

In hearing instruments with linear amplification, all sounds are amplified equally. With non-linear amplification, the greatest amount of amplification is given to soft sounds, which are typically inaudible to the hearing-impaired person, while loud sounds receive little or no amplification. Linear instruments perform well when the hearing loss is flat and there is a wide dynamic range at all frequencies; non-linear instruments perform well when the hearing loss varies at different frequencies and has a more narrow dynamic range and a greater difference within the dynamic range over frequency. At the same time, linear amplification most benefits those who experience small variation in sounds, while non-linear amplification lends itself to those who experience many different types of sounds.

Talk, listen, laugh, smile, and live again, with a custom-fitted hearing instrument from FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER. We pledge to provide you with professional service from a board certified hearing instrument specialist and the hearing device best suited to your individual needs to help improve your quality of life. Do you suspect you or someone you love has a hearing impairment? Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9

Yesterday's planetary patterns affect today as well. The Cancer moon forms a harmonious contact to Venus at 11:40 a.m. The first quarter phase occurs at 7:40 p.m., beginning the windup to a full moon that will culminate April 16. However, an alignment of the sun and Pluto takes center stage. This is an excellent day to launch a self-improvement program; start a diet, recognize and break a bad habit, begin an exercise or a meditation schedule.

THURSDAY, APRIL 10

It can be difficult to stay on track with practical matters this morning. The Cancer moon opposes Mars at 1:34 a.m. and becomes inactive. Mercury forms a 90-degree alignment to Jupiter at 7:08 a.m., warning you to choose your words carefully. Don't make impulsive decisions, purchases or promises. Avoid arrogant, self-righteous behavior. The moon enters Leo at 2:54 p.m., beginning a period that rates high for launching important enterprises. This favorable period is in effect between 2:54 p.m.-5:46 a.m. tomorrow, when the moon and Jupiter conjoin.

FRIDAY, APRIL 11

A Leo moon all day generates an upbeat mood. However, lunar alignments to Mercury at 8:31 a.m. and Neptune at 2:14 p.m. place important signings or decisions off limits. Don't take on anything too stressful or tedious in this period. However, the green light goes on at 2:30 p.m. for new starts in your business or personal life. The evening tops the charts for fun and games. Gather with friends and go for the good times.

SATURDAY, APRIL 12

Get an early start to this day. You can launch new ventures before 10:18 a.m., when the Leo moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. The remainder of the morning and afternoon is prime for catching up on unfinished projects, enjoying leisure activities. Stormy astrological weather moves in this evening. The moon enters Virgo at 8:07 p.m. and opposes Uranus at 10:53 p.m. In addition, Venus forms a challenging 90-degree alignment to Pluto. Sidestep disagreements, confrontations with others.

SUNDAY, APRIL 13

The combination of a Virgo moon and Mercury-Neptune alignment makes this a day to unplug from your daily routine; rest and recharge your batteries. Pursue activities that help you to relax and maintain a positive outlook. Others may be cranky, critical, stressed. Don't rock the boat. Avoid making important decisions, purchases or starting new enterprises.

MONDAY, APRIL 14

Gear up for a hectic morning. The Virgo moon forms stressful contacts to Pluto, Venus and Saturn, warning you to stay upbeat and go with the flow of things. The good news is that planetary influences turn around completely in the afternoon. An excellent period for initiating important enterprises occurs between 1:00-2:38 p.m., when the moon aligns with Mars and becomes inactive. In addition, the sun forms a harmonious contact to Saturn aiding discipline, focus, organization. The final windup to a full moon begins at 9:42 p.m., when the moon enters Libra.

TUESDAY, APRIL 15

A Libra full moon is building up and will culminate tomorrow. Energy and emotions run high. Stay alert and use common sense. This full moon is amplified by alignments of Venus, Saturn and Mars. Stay busy with projects that need to be finished or redone. Use extra caution when driving or operating machinery. Take extra quiet time for meditation, relaxation.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16

Yesterday's planetary influences are in effect today as well. Take on a full work agenda and stick with it. You can be most productive. The full moon culminates at 3:36 p.m., when the moon and sun oppose at 26 1/2-degrees Libra-Aries. The moon aligns with Mars at 4:22 p.m. and becomes inactive. A Scorpio moon takes over at 9:16 p.m. Venus forms a 90-degree alignment to Saturn, urging you to do some serious soul-searching. Instead of trying to change others or control situations, look within, change your thinking and find a new course of action for yourself.

THURSDAY, APRIL 17

This day has its challenges. Stop, look and listen. A serious Scorpio moon forms 90-degree contacts to Jupiter at 10:25 a.m. and Neptune at 5:44 p.m. Others may be hypersensitive, difficult to get along with. Don't make waves. In addition, the sun forms a 90-degree contact to combative Mars. This combination of planetary influences is favorable for developing projects that require study, research, investigation. Spend time alone. Strive for greater spiritual vision.

FRIDAY, APRIL 18

A Scorpio moon continues to evoke intense emotions. Pursue activities that help you to vent and maintain perspective. Your mental attitude will make all the difference. Keep your mind and hands busy with practical projects. The Scorpio moon interacts with Mars at 5:52 p.m. and becomes inactive. Influences turn around completely at 8:51 p.m., when the moon enters outgoing Sagittarius. A lunar alignment to Uranus prompts you to go with your wild side this evening.

Library chief can write the book on grants

Takes over at Paul Pratt

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

A new face is running Cohasset's new library.

With the retirement of library director Janet Husband, Jackie Rafferty, who served as director of the Hanson Public Library for eight years, has taken over.

Rafferty brings 18 years of experience as a librarian to Cohasset. She said she was attracted to the town because "it seemed like a very supportive library community."

Rafferty's first job at a library was a part-time position in her hometown of Plympton, where she still lives today. After deciding to pursue a career as a librarian, she attended graduate school at the University of Rhode Island, graduating with a master's degree in library and information science.

Since then, Rafferty has worked in libraries at Stonehill College and Quincy College before moving on to her last job as library director in Hanson.

"I've always, since I was four years old, had a passion for libraries," she said. "My parents brought me to the library weekly."

Rafferty is overjoyed to have the opportunity to be working in a "state-of-the-art facility" at the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library. She said she could tell that Cohasset residents appreciated it as well. "People don't just come in and take books out," she said. "They actually come in and spend time here."

As library director in Hanson, Rafferty implemented six grant programs and helped secure about $85,000 in funding for the library. The number of circulated items almost doubled during her tenure, from about 46,000 to nearly 82,000.

"I hope to be able to do the same type of work here in Cohasset," she said.

Rafferty is working with library trustees in Cohasset to develop a "long range plan" so the library can apply for grants in the future. She's also working to make the library Web site "more dynamic" and is

Burying wires still an option

Nothing is set in stone for the village project

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Just as it appeared designs for streetscape revitalization in Cohasset Village were coming into focus, Selectmen have decided to consider reprioritizing the entire project.

A $1.5 million state grant that had been slated to pay for improving sidewalks and streets may now be used for burying or repositioning utility wires first.

Selectmen said they will add two merchants to the task force and review all possible options for moving utility wires.

The decision came Tuesday night at the conclusion of a two-hour plus meeting between Selectmen, representatives from the Waterfield Design Group and village merchants. The meeting was originally intended to finalize the placement of bumpouts, parking spaces and crosswalks so that the project could be put to bid by April 30. (See sidebar)

It seemed as though minor design issues were being resolved slowly but surely until Tom Hamilton of Dean and Hamilton Realtors stood up and called for selectmen to reprioritize. "I think this is terrific," Hamilton said of the 75 percent completed village design. "But start with the utilities. Do the basics first...To have good looking Victorian lights between telephone poles is ridiculous."

Other merchants agreed with Hamilton and added that Selectmen had not lived up to a decision they made two months ago to appoint two merchants to the Downtown Revitalization Task Force.

At that point, Selectmen agreed request an extension from Mass Highway on the state grant to try to accommodate Hamilton's and others' concerns. As of now, the grant must be spent by June 30, 2004, meaning construction would need to begin this summer.

If an extension is granted, Selectmen said they will add two merchants to the task force and review all possible options for moving utility wires. They would then determine whether moving forward with one of those options was economically feasible. If the extension is denied, it is unclear

Grade shift is a done deal

Realignment set for Sept. 2004

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Grade three will move up to Deer Hill and grade six to the middle school — no matter what, the School Committee says.

Board members want to put to rest any discussion on revisiting grade realignment, which set the stage for the state's agreeing to reimburse the town for about 62 percent of the $41 million school renovation and expansion projects at the two schools. The state considers school projects for reimbursement under the School Building Assistance Bureau on the basis of enrollment and program needs.

But what was on the table and negotiated at the School Committee meeting last week with a handful of concerned parents was when the move would occur. After some discussion, the School Committee agreed to wait until September 2004 even though the transition could occur as early as next January when middle-high school construction is expected to be finished. Work at Deer Hill is just about complete.

"The grade reconfiguration has to go forward," Chairman Rick Flynn said. "Timing is on the table but grade reconfiguration is not on the table. If it doesn't go forward, it could affect our reimbursement."

School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo provided a historical snapshot of the decision process that took place about four years ago. He explained when discussion began members of the School Committee were "seriously split" on the issue but through work and research, ultimately voted unanimously for the grade realignment.

"The grade reconfiguration has to go forward."
— School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn

DeGiacomo urged his fellow board members to decide on the date for the realignment, so the discussion could focus on the "specifics of the report" compiled by Supt. Edward Malvey with input from the task force that consisted of parents, faculty, support staff and administrators.

Although Malvey said the move could occur mid-year with little disruption to students and staff, several parents in attendance said a mid-year

Neighbors don't want the spotlight

Insist CHS lights are a glaring issue

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

While the step by step construction continues to reveal impressive improvements at the new middle-high school, some neighbors aren't happy with the proliferation of outdoor lights which are part of the project.

To that end, they implored the School Committee to take their concerns under consideration because the "light pollution" will have an adverse effect on their quality of life.

In a petition to the board, the neighbors described the planned exterior lighting as "excessive."

"As abutters to the middle-high school we consider this a radical, unnecessary and unfriendly change to the neighborhood," stated the petition that was signed by members of about 28 households.

They said the school could meet all safety standards with considerably less lighting.

Patricia Connors, 148 Pond St., said Town Hall and the new library have far less lighting.

"In the end this will rival that over Stop & Shop and that concerns us greatly," she said.

Karen Quigley, 27 Clay Spring Road, said the light from the loading docks shines into her bedroom all night long.

School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn, who attends the School Building Committee meetings, said lighting plans were drawn up three years ago when the architectural plans for the school were put together. He said he wasn't sure how much could be changed, but promised to work with the abutters "to try to be good neighbors." He pointed out that a school had been on the site for 50 years.

School board reorganizes

In the interest of continuity, the School Committee has voted unanimously to have Rick Flynn continue as chairman and Chartis Tebbetts as vice chairman. However, member Jane Pescatore will take over as the board's secretary from Pat Martin, who joked "in the interest of sharing – she didn't want to hog that position."

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of Tuesday, April 15:

Board of Assessors, May 6 at 4 p.m.

Board of Health, April 22 at 7 p.m.

Conservation Commission, April 24 at 7:30 p.m.

Selectmen, April 29 at 7:30 p.m.

Sewer Commission, April 17 at 6 p.m.

Water Commission, April 23 at 8 p.m. and May 1 at 8 p.m. at 339 King St., April 28 at 8 p.m. at Town Hall

Zoning Board of Appeals, April 22 at 7:30 p.m.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless posted otherwise. .

More potential woes for Avalon

The Water Commission is asking the Conservation Commission to determine whether the proposed 200-unit AvalonBay development would negatively impact the wetlands resources of the town. Water Commissioners believe that modified stormwater and groundwater patterns as well as wastewater discharge on the proposed site would directly alter wetlands, requiring AvalonBay to file a Notice of Intent with the Conservation Commission.

The Water Commission will meet with the Conservation Commission at Town Hall on April 28 at 8 p.m.

One vacancy filled, one still remains

Rich Sylvia has been appointed to the Housing Authority to fill a vacancy created when former member Jane Nawn Harris resigned because she moved out of town. Sylvia previously served on the Housing Authority as the Governor's appointee.

Selectmen are still looking to fill a vacancy on the Common Historic District Commission created when former member Alex Adkins resigned due to personal commitments. The position is reserved for an architect.

All-facilities sticker

Selectmen voted 3 to 1 to offer a single "all facilities" sticker, eliminating the option of purchasing a "beach parking" sticker. The "all facilities" sticker will gain access to both the beach parking lot and the transfer station. It will cost $30 for both the first and second sticker, and $15 for seniors.

Previously, a "beach parking" sticker could be purchased at prices of $7 for the first and $3 for the second. "All facilities" stickers, meanwhile, used to cost $35 for the first and $20 for the second.

Selectmen said the new sticker and fee structure would not increase revenues but would create far less paperwork for the Town Clerk.

Selectman Fred Koed was opposed the measures, saying that people who bought "beach parking" stickers only would see an unfair hike in fees.

Selectman Merle Brown, however, said other towns charged fees much higher than Cohasset, pointing to Duxbury, where he said beach stickers cost up to $40 and transfer station stickers cost as much as $200.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said last year, residents purchased about 1200 "beach parking stickers" and about 1900 "all facilities" stickers, 500 of which were second stickers.

Selectmen seek Web volunteers

Selectman Tom Callahan is asking for volunteers to help develop a town Web site. Callahan said the Town needs to use the Internet and its local cable access to promote meetings of boards and committees. He said agendas and minutes of meetings should be posted online.

Callahan said he is willing to maintain the Web site if a citizen could teach him how.

When Selectmen looked into developing a Web site before, they decided against it after determining it would cost $25,000. Selectman Michael Sullivan indicated that if no volunteers could be found, the board should consider spending the money to establish a site. "I think every town has one now," he said.

Sullivan said posting agendas and minutes online could be too much to ask because it may require a full-time webmaster, but Callahan disagreed, saying town employees could be taught how to do it themselves.

Water system's 25th anniversary

All Cohasset residents are invited to the 25th Anniversary Ceremony at 1 p.m. on May 11 to commemorate the 25th year of operation of the Aaron River Reservoir and the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant.

"On May 11, 1978, Cohasset residents ended years of summer watering bans and water shortages," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission. "During the past 25 years we have had the benefit a vast water resource, the 323 million gallon capacity Aaron River Reservoir, that is the envy of other cities and towns."

Special recognition will be made at the event to former town officials and others who helped with the long process to build the teservoir and treatment plant, and to former Water Commissioners, said McNabb.

The anniversary ceremony will be held on the Aaron River Dam, which residents can get to by parking at the end of Beechwood Street or on Aaron River Road.

Keep well clinic

The Board of Health will sponsor the following Keep Well Clinic:

• Thursday April 24 from 1-3 p.m. at the Harborview Senior Housing on Elm Street.

Open burning season

Cohasset residents may obtain permits on a daily basis from through May 1, for open burning. Permits may be obtained by calling the Fire Department Dispatch, Center at 781-383-0260 between the hours of 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Permits are valid for one day only.

Burning may be conducted during periods of good atmospheric ventilation and must not cause a nuisance. Adverse weather conditions (wind and drought) will impact permit issuance. Burning hours are from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on days permits are issued. Decisions to issue permits are made daily at 9 a.m. Persons calling for permits before that hour will be advised to call back.

Open burning permits are issued for the disposal of brush, cane, driftwood and forestry debris. Burning shall be conducted on land proximate to the place of generation. Burning shall be conducted at a distance greater than 75 feet from any dwelling. Select a safe area with no ground cover. While burning the fire must be attended until completely extinguished. Have a water hose rake and shovel nearby for fire control.

One person after another got up to speak at this week's Army Corps of Engineers public hearing about Greenbush restoration. Of the dozens of speakers coming from Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield, and Weymouth, only a few came out to support the project.

One of the strongest comments against Greenbush was a gentleman who called the train a "weapon of mass destruction."

A Scituate lobsterman also spoke with feeling.

"Greenbush would have severe negative impacts on the environment," he said. "Trees would suffer from a daily deadly dose of diesel fuel. Perhaps the MBTA should study express bus lines combined with (additional) commuter boat service."

Hingham Advisory Committee Chairman Carolyn Nielsen, citing property value deterioration, flooding problems, and other issues, urged the Corps to "correct a 150-year-old mistake (referring to prior rail service). Rail restoration is neither reasonable, defensible, nor desirable."

Not everyone thinks Greenbush is a bad idea, though.

Terry Fancher, General Manager of South Shore Chamber of Commerce, said he's "seen and heard every tactic known to mankind" used by opponents to fight Greenbush.

"All it has done is drive up the cost. This project is not a popularity contest. It is about moving people and doing so in a cost-effective and yet environmentally sensitive manner," he said. "This project has the capability of moving people in conjunction with boats, buses, and other forms of mass transit. It can be done in three years. It could have been done a lot cheaper and a lot quicker."

The Corps, the lead federal agency overseeing plans to restore the Greenbush rail line, will ultimately make the crucial decision of whether to issue a permit allowing the MBTA to move full-steam ahead with its plans. The transit authority recently announced a six-month delay pending awarding of the necessary permits.

The need for four-quadrant gates dominated the remarks from the outset as well as concerns about safety issues and visual impacts related to the MBTA's plan to install two-quad gates instead.

Hingham's Memorandum of Understanding with the MBTA to limit adverse impacts of the project on the town was addressed in particular because the Selectmen believe the transit authority is attempting to scale back on previously agreed upon mitigation measures. Those include elimination of four-quadrant gates at grade crossings, which are considered safer than two-quad gates because they have arms that stop traffic on both sides of the street, preventing cars from skirting around the gate to beat the train.

"This could very well be an issue of life and death," said Attorney Stephen Follansbee, speaking on behalf of the Town of Hingham.

Hingham Selectman Melissa Tully said the MBTA is fully aware of the dangers of using two-quad gates at grade crossings.

"The MBTA knows this design poses a significant risk in particular to pedestrians and cyclists," she said, referring to the June 1998 tragedy in Abington when Kelly Ann Boyd, 15, was fatally struck by an MBTA train while Riding her bike. According to a witness, Kelly looked both ways but apparently did not notice the approaching train as she dodged the flashing gates.

Tully noted that according to a published report, state officials had ordered the MBTA to install four-quadrant gates, which block access to the tracks from all directions, at each crossing but the transit authority had not complied.

She further noted that there were five incidents involving bicyclists and a pedestrian passing around lowered gates when warning systems were activated in a two-week period at the Wales Street crossing in Abington. That information was gained from surveillance tapes.

"You factor that over 52 weeks and you have 130 incidents a year at one grade crossing," Tully said. "The MBTA is dismissing their own video evidence and the death of a young girl in order to justify their cost-conscious decision to use two-quadrant gates for the Greenbush project. . . . It is unconscionable that the MBTA continues to knowingly put forward grade crossing designs that are unsafe."

Dangers involved with two-quad gates in the area of South Shore Country Club, where hundreds of children and adults go to play golf, T-ball, and tennis, swim, and bowl, were also noted.

The use of two-quad gates would also require street widenings and limit access to personal driveways and businesses along those roads in those areas.

Project changes

Andrew Brennan, MBTA Director of Environmental Affairs, discussed project changes which have occurred during the past several years, including the location of the Scituate layover facility and a change of location for the Nantasket Junction station in Hingham.

"The alternatives have been looked at to determine which one would have the least environmentally damaging impact," he said. In the MBTA's opinion, Greenbush fits the bill.

That's not how Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, views the project. The senator spoke out about the "many unresolved issues," including safety and environmental impacts.

"Much of this project is driven by politics, not transportation policy," he said. "We need transportation alternatives, but safety and cost issues remain. The alternatives have been given short-shrift by the MBTA."

Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, thinks the Greenbush price tag, which now exceeds $400 million, is much too high.

"The cost is $275,000 per new rider. That's an astonishing figure, which will continue to rise. That means the MBTA will continue to cut corners as it has done with mitigation measures," he said.

Residents and town officials from Hingham and other communities which would be affected by Greenbush restoration were able to sign up an hour before each of two sessions, one held in the afternoon and the other in the evening, thereby reserving a three-minute slot during which they could summarize their concerns about Greenbush restoration, or in a few cases, sing its praises. Some 300 individuals attended the two hearings held April 15.

The public hearing was held at the request of Hingham Selectmen and public officials from other towns to address a number of issues related to Greenbush restoration, which would involve installing 18 miles of rail line and building seven new commuter rail stations and a layover facility at the end of the line.

The public hearing was in response to an application from the MBTA for a permit to place fill material within a total of 7.81 acres of wetlands and waterways for the construction of the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Railroad.

Key issues revolve around potential adverse impacts on waterways and wetlands, but the Corps is also looking at a number of other issues, including land use, the benefits of installing four-quadrant gates, and conservation and environmental concerns.

Vernal pool

Jeffery Moy of Cohasset, whose Ledgewood Drive house abuts the tracks, is concerned that runoff from the train will damage the habitat of a vernal pool located on his property and that the already existing one to two feet of standing water will creep into the rail beds. He is also concerned about the safety of the more than 80 children under age 12 in the subdivision and is asking that a chain link fence be installed around a large parcel of undeveloped land adjacent to Ledgewood Drive for safety reasons.

A number of environmentalists aired their concerns about protecting the North River and the Scituate watershed. Concerns were also raised about impacts to the South Shore Art Center building in Cohasset, which is situated nine feet from the tracks, with respect to vibration.

Those who were unable to attend the hearing to offer comments have until April 25 to do so. They may be sent to: Ted Lento, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, New England District, Regulatory Division, 696 Virginia Road, Concord, Mass. 01742-2751.

Larry Rosenberg, Chief of Public Affairs for the Corps, said all comments, both written and oral — including those made at a hearing attended by 500 people in 1997 — will be considered before the Corps makes its decision, which will be based in part on the environmental and socioeconomic impact of rail restoration to the South Shore.

GOT to have Greenbush, new advocacy group says

Pro-train effort to make tracks

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Too many hours stuck in traffic gridlock along Rte. 3 have compelled a former South Shore Chamber of Commerce president to take the helm of a new pro-train group, dubbed GOT (Greenbush On Track).

Ralph Rivkind, an attorney with an office in Boston, is also unapologetic about living in Norwell, which along with Marshfield and north Duxbury, are considered part of the Greenbush corridor in terms of drawing riders. Those towns won't have any direct environmental impact if restoration of the railroad line becomes a reality.

"Don't get me wrong, if I had bought a house with rusty tracks in the backyard and was told the train would never come, I'd be upset," says Rivkind, who adds one-third of the population of Norwell commutes to the city.

Although the South Shore Chamber has continuously backed the train, the Quincy-based organization decided it won't let the "silent majority" remain mum any longer.

Armed with a new poll it commissioned that shows an average of 64 percent of residents in Greenbush towns want the train – the Chamber insists GOT is not a Chamber organization but an advocacy group that already has the backing of the South Shore Building and Trades Council (a labor organization), commuters and area citizens. To make their point, GOT members manned stand-outs on overpasses during rush hour along Rte. 3 Tuesday morning and evening with signs urging commuters to join the effort to restore rail service to the South Shore.

"Our goal is to make sure both sides are heard," Rivkind says. "The new administration has a difficult decision to make under the current financial crisis and has to look at everything. But we hope they make the decision that Greenbush is the easiest, quickest and least expense per rider solution."

> "Now is the time for the silent majority to raise its voice."
> — Ralph Rivkind, GOT chairman

By coincidence the announcement of the new pro-Greenbush group followed on the heels of a Boston Globe story on Monday pronouncing the beleaguered $470 million rail project all but dead. The Globe reported in a front-page article the Romney administration would abandon all suburban commuter rail projects in favor of urban "T" expansion and improvements.

However, both the governor's office and the state Transportation Office, dismissed reports of Greenbush's demise.

"We have not ruled out Greenbush," says Jon Carlisle, spokesman for Transportation Secretary Daniel Grabauskas. "The project is still very much on the table." He explained the administration is trying to develop objective criteria with which to judge the various MBTA projects that include Greenbush and extending commuter rail to Fall River and New Bedford, among improvements to T service on the Silver and Blue lines.

"We said in the first two or three months we'd look at Greenbush and other projects, while construction is halted for six months for permitting and right-of-way issues," Carlisle said. [The MBTA put a six-month halt on Greenbush construction in February].

The review includes environmental issues, cost and transportation benefits, he said. "We want to make sure everything is in place before we make a final call on the project," Carlisle said.

But he gave assurances if Greenbush is abandoned, the South Shore would not be left without any transportation alternatives.

"It is a big hypothetical 'if', but if Greenbush is not built" the state would look to alternatives that would provide transportation for numbers comparable to the train, he said.

Rivkind says no one argues there isn't a need to solve transportation woes on the South Shore. He noted the Plymouth and Middleboro lines, which resumed service in 1997, have been "wildly successful."

He says not building Greenbush would eventually have an adverse affect on the economy and growth in the area.

"Now is the time for the silent majority to raise its voice," Rivkind said. "Anyone who wants to see traffic eased, who wants to take a train to Boston, or wants the state to keep its promise, can join us by sending an email to greenbushontrack@aol.com."

Affordable housing plan to be reviewed

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

In an effort to develop affordable housing that is consistent with the town's character, the Growth and Development Committee has released a plan that recommends several bylaw changes and also calls for a new volunteer group called the Cohasset Housing Partnership.

The affordable housing plan is part of the committee's larger project to create a master plan for the town. According to the plan, the Cohasset Housing Partnership would "take the lead in planning for affordable housing," drawing on expertise from within the community, such as public officials, business and community leaders, lawyers, realtors and others. The current Senior Housing Committee may be folded into the partnership.

Tasks of the partnership would include establishing criteria to evaluate affordable housing proposals from developers, making recommendations on those proposals and locating land suitable for affordable housing development.

The plan also recommends several changes in bylaws to encourage the creation of more affordable units. One suggested zoning amendment would allow apartments by right on the upper floors of buildings in the Downtown Business District. For that purpose, it would also allow for the addition of two to three stories on existing one story buildings, provided the first story maintained its retail use.

A second suggested change would revise the current accessory dwelling bylaw, which, enacted last year, has so far generated no requests for permits. The change would streamline the process in return for affordability contracts.

A third regulatory change, which was withdrawn from the warrant on the floor of Annual Town Meeting, would give amnesty to illegal apartments provided they were made affordable.

A fourth suggestion would be to explore inclusionary zoning, which could, for example, require that new developments of 10 or more units be at least 10 percent affordable, or in lieu of that, require the developer make a payment to an affordable housing trust established by the town.

The affordable housing plan is the third section in the housing chapter of the town's master plan. The first section provides an overview of all residential development in town to date. The second outlines the needs for senior housing and affordable housing with respect to Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law.

Chapter 40B allows developers to apply for a comprehensive permit if less than 10 percent of a town's housing is affordable by state standards, provided that 20 to 25 percent of the proposed development would be affordable.

But under new 40B regulations, towns that have a state-approved affordable housing plan can deny a permit application without a chance for appeal. For a plan to be recognized by the state, a town must prove that it would create three-quarters of one percent of affordable housing per year. That would mean 21 new affordable units per year in Cohasset.

No town has had an affordable housing plan approved by the state, although many have submitted them for review and are awaiting a decision.

At Town Meeting last fall, residents voted to accelerate the affordable housing plan to have it completed by Jan. 1, 2003. It's a few months behind schedule, but the plan is now ready to be reviewed. Town officials plan to have a public hearing on the document at the Selectmen's meeting on May 6.

Wanted: Creative thinking to preserve town character

Focus on land use, open space

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The meeting was a forum for residents to discuss strategies of how to enhance and preserve Cohasset's environmental sustainability, natural landscapes, open space and scenic and historic character.

Dick Avery of Surry Drive sees two sides to building sidewalks. They may improve safety, but they can also potentially destroy a road's character.

"For us to build a sidewalk on Forest Avenue, we're going to have to push trees back and blast ledge," he said. "I'm afraid we're going to lose Forest Avenue just to improve safety."

What most residents actually want, according to Avery, is not sidewalks but "safe passage." In many cases, he said, that could be accomplished by a simple path paved with stone dust, which would require far less alteration of the existing road.

Avery's comments came at a public hearing Monday night held by the Growth and Development Committee. Like Avery, other residents said more creative thinking was needed to accomplish the town's goals and still preserve its unique character.

The meeting was a forum for residents to discuss strategies of how to enhance and preserve Cohasset's environmental sustainability, natural landscapes, open space and scenic and historic character. It was intended to get feedback on how these issues should be addressed in the town's master plan, which the Growth and Development Committee hopes to complete by June.

The discussion was preceded by a presentation from John Seward of the Community Design Partnership, the consulting group that is helping the committee draft the master plan. Residents then chimed in with their own suggestions.

Roger Lowe of Beach Street, whose property is on a potentially dangerous curve in that road, agreed that more innovation was needed. "If we ask an engineer (to build a sidewalk), we get a straight line, four feet wide, the length of the street," he said, suggesting that in many cases it was unnecessary to go to such lengths.

"Maybe what we need is just for some people to give up part of their property. Would I give up three or four feet so people would feel safer in front of my house? Sure I would."

Lowe agreed that more design review was needed. "I think some of the biggest offenders of preserving the character of the town have been the Town," he said, citing the addition to Town Hall and the new flood lights at the Middle High School.

Mark DeGiacomo, also of Beach Street, encouraged the Community Design Partnership to come up with possible ways of protecting ledge. "I would say that, next to our water, ledge is probably number two in our natural resources," he said.

Lowe said one of the reasons a bylaw to protect ledge had not been passed at Town Meeting in the past was because the issue of property rights, which opponents of the bylaw often point to, had not been fully addressed by ledge preservationists.

"We never really answered (the property rights) question," he said. "We didn't talk about people who have moved into a community and it is in their economic interest to have a community preserved."

Tom Callahan, a selectman and also a member of the Growth and Development Committee, said several proposed bylaws that would regulate land use and protect open space were likely to be introduced at Town Meeting this fall.

One of those bylaws is the ledge bylaw. Another would require a site plan review for new homes over 3,000 square feet so that neighbors and town officials could to provide input on designs that might not be in the character of the town.

Callahan said supporters of these measures would need to be vocal and encourage others to attend Town Meeting. "Our committee needs to get a sense from the people in the town that when it comes to Town Meeting, they're ready to stand up and really vote for (the bylaws) and not say, 'oh, property rights,'" he said.

Several residents said that a better public relations effort from town officials who support such measures would be helpful. Avery said the Town should try to make better use of public access television. A public hearing like this one, he said, should be aired on TV.

"If that's encapsulated and played 10 times over the course of a month, that's an asset," he said.

Property tax bills are due May 1

The Town of Cohasset has issued the Fiscal Year 2003 fourth quarter tax bills due May 1. Anyone who has not received their tax bill should contact the Board of Assessors at 781-383-4114 to confirm their correct mailing address or the Treasurer/Collector at 781-383-4102 for a copy of the tax bill.

Online with eBill

On April 14, the Town of Cohasset began offering residents the option of paying their Real Estate tax bills via the Internet.

The eBill system takes the Town's billing data and posts it on the Metropolitan Communications (MCC) web site, which allows residents to view and pay their real estate tax bills. At 25 cents per transaction, the new payment option costs residents less than a stamp.

Residents can arrange for bill payments to be automatically withdrawn from their checking or savings account, and eBill will be accepting credit card payments shortly.

Currently, residents are able to pay real estate tax bills with eBill. This summer, residents will also be able to pay motor vehicle excise and water/sewer bills using eBill.

To find out more information, or to make a payment, residents should visit the eBill website at www.mcc.net

Voluntary contributions

Over the past two years, thousands of dollars have been raised through the voluntary contribution program. However, there is still a way to go before the fund balances will be sufficient to grant awards. Your continued support is greatly appreciated! To make a voluntary contribution simply complete line two of your tax bill and add that contribution to the amount due. The following is a description of the three available funds:

Scholarship Fund will provide secondary school tuition assistance to deserving Town residents. These funds will be in addition to scholarships currently available to Town residents.

Educational Fund will provide supplemental educational funding for the Cohasset Public Schools. Additionally, funds may be used for existing adult literacy programs.

Elderly/Disabled Fund will provide property tax relief for elderly and disabled Cohasset taxpayers who meet specific criteria established by the Elderly/Disabled Fund committee.

Alzheimer's benefit brunch at Saporito's

"A Taste of Spring: A Wine Tasting Brunch," is the 11th annual fund-raising event for the Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore, Inc. The festivities will take place at Saporito's Florence Club Café in Hull on Sunday, May 18 at 1 p.m.

The event includes a five-course gourmet menu. Each course is accompanied by a wine selected by Mark Lewis of M.S. Walker Company who will explain the fine art of blending foods and wines. The Joe Micarelli Trio will provide a jazz accompaniment to the food and wine. Again, Andy and Mary Ann Saporito Boothroyd have selected from their culinary favorites to present an exciting menu. Lucky winners will be chosen for baskets of gourmet foods and wines gathered for the occasion.

All proceeds from this event underwrite ADSGSS activities: it's monthly newsletter, outreach brochures, postage, family information packets and the help-line phone. ADSGSS, Inc. is a non-profit educational corporation that depends solely on public donations.

Reservations for this event, that benefits this meaningful cause must be made in advance. Tables may be arranged to accommodate four, five or eight people together at $65 per person. Please call JoAnn Mitchell at 781-749-5417, evenings, for reservations.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

SPECIAL DAY

Happy Birthday wishes are being sent out this week to Miss Callie Piepenbrink as she gets ready to celebrate her ninth birthday next Wednesday, April 23. Callie, we are all so proud of you and Daddy, Daniel, Cody and I, along with your friends and family hope that you enjoy your special day! We love you a big bunch, Callie Coconuts!

TOP SAILOR

Thanks in part to Cohasset's Wiley Wakeman, the Hobart and William Smith sailors beat out nine other teams, including the second-ranked squad from St. Mary's College, to win the Navy J-24 Regatta. Hobart and William Smith finished with 27 points, five better than the second place Seahawks. Wiley, along with his teammates, won four races and finished second in two others to secure first place. Great Sailing Wiley and to all the other members of your team.

MAINE STUDIES PROGRAM

Sarah Kidder, a Union College Class of 2005 biology major, will participate this spring in the college's Marine Studies program. Sarah is a 2001 graduate of the Cohasset Middle-High School. During this 10-week program, Sarah will study on a ship in St. George's in Bermuda; Woods Hole on Cape Cod; and Newfoundland in Canada. She will study the diversity and adaptations of marine organisms in their environment, as well as the social life of maritime communities and the shaping of national and international marine policies. This sounds like a fantastic opportunity for you Sarah, make sure to update us with your travel experience.

CRTC SCHOLARSHIPS

After receiving successful first semester transcripts the Cohasset Republican Town Committee has distributed its first two scholarships to: Daniel Littauer, who is the son of Thomas and Teresa Littauer, is currently attending Boston College, and Nancy Winters, the daughter of John and Joanne Winters, who is a student at St. Michael's in Vermont. Congratulations to these fine students who are the initial recipients of this annual award.

ST. SEBASTIAN'S HONORS

Paul F. Digan, a senior, and Paul B. Cotter, a sophomore, have been named to the third-quarter honor roll at St. Sebastian's School in Needham. The boys had to maintain a B- or better in all subjects to make the honor roll. Their proud parents are Thomas and Mary Ann Digan and Dr. Paul and Margaret Cotter.

PSO CALENDAR

The PSO Calendar that so many of us rely on and use on a regular basis, is in the works! Any school event or important date, town organization, nursery school or other pertinent information should be emailed to psocalendar@yahoo.com at any time from now until July 15! Make sure to include a contact person and all key information.

NIFTY AT FIFTY

On Saturday, April 12 at 5 p.m., a surprise 50th birthday party was given for Al Riccio by his wife Linda and the Conte Family at the home of her brother John Conte and his wife Joni. There were 70 of his relatives and friends that attended this very happy celebration! A great time was had by all. Happy Birthday, Al!

ON STAGE

Look for Cohasset's Austin Breslow (standing center, in the leather jacket) in "Rebel Without A Cause" produced by the Company Theatre's Teen Conservatory Program. The play, featuring youths 13-18, is on stage April 25 & 26. Call 781-871-2787 for more information.

TUTORING OFFERED

Hey parents and students. Miss Nichole Santoro is going to be tutoring students in grades 3-6! Maybe you want to keep the momentum going over the summer, give some extra help in a certain subject or just have some extra support for your child. For more information please e-mail her at Torosun@aol.com

LIFEGUARDS SOUGHT

The Cohasset Swim Center would like to extend a final invitation for applicants! Cohasset Swim Center is accepting applications for lifeguards for the 2003 summer season. All applicants must be 16 years of age and hold current Lifeguard/CPR/First Aid certifications. Letters of interest should be sent to Attn: Darleen Koetsch, Cohasset Swim Center, P.O. Box 132, Cohasset, MA 02025 or e-mail cohassetswimcenter@attbi.com

Anyone interested in employment, and is enrolled or planning to enroll in a Lifeguard and/or WSI are encouraged to apply. Employment will depend on successful completion of the course.

Benefit night raises $25K

Supporters of the Social Service League of Cohasset gathered amidst a sea of gold balloons at the Cohasset Golf Club on April 5 to toast the Cohasset Consignment Shop's Golden Jubilee Anniversary. There was something for everyone during the fun filled evening.

Before dinner, guests were able to bid on dozens of donated silent auction items, buy chances on creative raffle baskets, and meet Channel 5 news anchor and Cohasset resident Anthony Everett.

Singer Anne Czerkawski, who paid tribute to the Consignment Shop with her own arrangement of "Second Hand Rose," provided the evening's entertainment. A live auction, featuring the easy-going and humorous Everett as the auctioneer, was the highlight of the evening.

This event, the second fundraiser that the League has organized, was an outstanding success. Approximately $25,000 was raised to support the League's work with families, counseling, referrals, and domestic violence assistance.

Anthony Everett, who served as auctioneer, holds a watch donated for the live auction.

Memorial fund sets tone for CMHS Jazz Ensemble

Performs with top trio May 5

Harvey and school officials hope the fund will provide the basis for a solid jazz curriculum at the school for years to come.

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The late Cyril Percival Harvey only lived in Cohasset for three years, but his legacy may live on here forever.

Cyril's son, Lou Harvey, has set up a fund in his father's memory to sponsor a jazz program at Cohasset Middle High School. Harvey and school officials hope the fund will provide the basis for a solid jazz curriculum at the school for years to come.

Now in its first year, the CMHS Jazz Ensemble, the first product of that fund, is preparing for its biggest performance to date. On May 5, the group, made up of 20 students from grades 7 through 12, will play a concert in Middle High School cafeteria. Joining them will be the Aaron Thurston Trio, a renowned professional jazz group from New York City.

Harvey said his father, who had always been a jazz lover, moved to Cohasset to live with his son in his old age following a period of illness. After regaining his health, he started up playing the piano and the saxophone again.

"It showed that he had been revitalized," said Harvey. "He was invigorated again."

Harvey said Cyril fell in love with Cohasset and the sense of security and community that surrounded it. After he died last summer, Harvey created the C.P. Harvey Memorial fund as a way to give "something of lasting value in town" and "to stimulate the interest of music in the community."

Stephanie Hoskin, the first-year music director at the Middle High School, said the Jazz Ensemble has been a great addition to the school's music program. The group practices after school one day a week under Hoskin's direction. Their first performance came at this winter's holiday concert.

"They felt very good," said Hoskin. "I thought they performed very well."

At the upcoming concert, the ensemble will play two standard blues pieces and then join the Aaron Thurston Trio for a song. After that, the Trio will take over.

"It's always great when you can relate a classroom experience to people who have made a career of playing music," said Hoskin.

Ruth Fennessey, the CMHS curriculum coordinator, said the creation of the Jazz Ensemble jived perfectly with Principal Michael Jones' desire to start a jazz program. "We wanted the program to have a two-fold purpose, one being education and one being entertainment," she said.

Lou Harvey asks residents who attend the concert to understand that the Jazz Ensemble is a first-year program. "We ask the town to be forgiving if they miss a note here and there," he said.

Still, Harvey was enthusiastic that the program would catch on quickly in the community. "I'd like to see this thing grow financially as well as have more of an impact on the school," he said.

Hoskin, too, hopes the curriculum will expand and allow for two jazz groups, one at the Middle School and one at the High School.

Harvey said his father would be overjoyed to see the amount of interest in jazz that a fund in his memory had created. "He used to have a phrase: 'You did good,'" Harvey said. "I think he'd use that now."

Tickets to the May 5 concert, which begins at 7 p.m., can be purchased by calling the Middle High School at 781-383-6100. Prices are $8 for students and $15 for adults. Proceeds will go to the C.P. Harvey Memorial Jazz Fund.

Geologist talks at annual society dinner

Speaker will be geologist, Peter Dillon, addressing "The Geologic History of Cohasset: The Really Early Years."

The Cohasset Historical Society will hold its spring dinner on Sunday, April 27 at the Cohasset Harbor Inn, 124 Elm St. from 5::30 to 9:30 p.m. The featured speaker will be geologist, Peter Dillon, addressing "The Geologic History of Cohasset: The Really Early Years."

Dillon received his Master's degree from Boston College and worked for a number of years for the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection as a hydrogeologist before becoming a consultant on water supply and wastewater issues. Cost of the dinner and presentation is $30 for historical dociety members and $35 for non-members. A cash bar will be available. Anyone interested in attending may send their check to Cohasset Historical Society, 14 Summer St., Cohasset, MA 02025. (781-383-1434). Please include your name and address as well as your choice of entrée. (Baked cod with buttery topping or chicken francais in white wine and lemon sauce with herbs and capers.) All are welcome to attend this fun and informative evening.

Grade realignment set for Sept. 2004 move would not allow time for a comprehensive transition plan.

Malvey explained it makes sense to move the classes mid-year if the facilities, which represent a significant investment by the taxpayers, are ready. He said children are resilient and described the transition as a "cake walk" when compared to the construction zone the students have been living in for sometime.

He said the timing of the move wasn't a budgetary issue because the operating costs are the same either way.

However, the task force report — which will be the subject of upcoming parent forums — does recommend additional staffing at the grade 6-8 middle school, and, although they share the same building, will be a completely separate entity from the high school. Recommendations include an administrator-in-charge, a counselor or dean of students, a nurse and a secretary — at an estimated annual cost of $165,000. No additional staff was recommended at Deer Hill.

The School Committee reasoned that, although next year's budget looks bleak, there might be an opportunity to resolve some of the issues in the fiscal year '05 budget that takes effect, July 1, 2004. The board also said holding off on the realignment until September '04 would also give the new principal at Deer Hill some time in the position before the grades shift. [Pointing to issues surrounding curriculum, instructional leadership and the restructuring of elementary school grades as reasons for the decision, Malvey did not renew Principal Paul Callahan's contract]. The September move would also mean two classes [old and new sixth graders] would make the move to the middle school at the same time, which might provide some continuity for those students.

Copies of the Task Force Report are available at Malvey's office at the middle-high school, all the school libraries, the selectmen's office and at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. No dates for parent forums had been set by presstime.

Neighbors say lights are a glaring issue

"I'm not sure we can have a dark building," he said.

But the abutters said while they were thrilled to have a renovated middle-high school, they feel it is a detriment to have the maximum amount of lighting. They also questioned the cost of having so many lights.

In what the neighbors described as a "radical change," 32 post and lanterns will be installed on the school grounds and about 25 flood lights on the building itself, according to the electrical site plans. While there were some flood lights on the "old" building there were no posts and lanterns at the school, said abutters, adding they thought the school department was forgetting the high school is in a residential neighborhood.

School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo said now was the time to get controls in place, such as the number of circuits. dimmers and timers, so certain lights could be off while others are on

"As abutters to the middle-high school we consider this a radical, unnecessary and unfriendly change to the neighborhood."
— Neighborhood petition

"When the building is turned over to us, we're in charge so it's important that we have the tools and a variety of options available," he said.

Rich Silvia, 445 Beechwood St., who grew up in the high school neighborhood, said the bad news is light pollution can affect quality of life, but the good news is it is easily fixed.

He explained shades can be installed so light stays out of homes, so the only areas that need lighting are illuminated. Silvia suggested the School Committee take the shades off lamps in their living rooms to get an idea of what the neighbors will be living with.

Flynn, the School Committee chairman, agreed there was a lot of light.

"We'll work with you and work with them (School Building Committee) to get it right," he said. "I don't want to spend a lot of extra money on utilities we don't need."

Supt. Edward Malvey suggested the neighbors get any suggestions to Flynn before the next School Building Committee meeting on May 5. He noted the meeting is open to the public and the building committee could deal with specific suggestions more effectively rather than "simply saying the light is too much."

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Flynn said he talked to the Building Committee which planned to contact the lighting engineer to see what could be done. He was optimistic the school department and neighbors could reach a mutually amicable solution.

"It was a 50-year-old school at which some lighting had changed over the years," Flynn said. "But lights lit to 21st century specs can be quite a change.

"However, we're going to try to be good neighbors while providing security for the building and safety for those going in and out of the school," he said.

Synopsis of annual water quality report

The Cohasset Water Department provided the Mariner with this press release.

The Cohasset Water Commission recently mailed its 2003 Water Quality Report to all Cohasset residents. EPA requires all water suppliers to prepare and distribute this report by July 1 each year.

"We are pleased to report, again, that Cohasset drinking water is in compliance with all applicable water quality standards," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission.

In 2002, the water department continued to take many significant steps to preserve and protect the quality of Cohasset's public drinking water, including the annual flushing of the distribution system, the rehabilitation of about nine-tenths of a mile of water mains by replacing undersized mains and by cleaning & lining others, and by starting to implement the department's comprehensive "Surface Water Supply Protection Plan," McNabb explained.

EPA regulations require all water suppliers to report all regulated contaminants which are detected in the drinking water. During calendar year 2002, the following contaminants were detected, all within compliance of applicable water quality regulations:

Fluoride – Added to the water to promote strong teeth; detected at a maximum of 1.25 parts per million (ppm), less than the Maximum contaminant Level (MCL) of 4 ppm.

Chlorine – Added to disinfect water to prevent disease from microorganisms. While chlorine is required to be added to the water for public health reasons, it is important to keep chlorine levels as low as possible. "We detected a maximum of 1.45 ppm of chlorine, which is lower than the 4.0 ppm Maximum Residual Disinfection Level recommended by EPA," said McNabb.

Total Trihalomethanes (TTHM) – Byproduct from chlorination and reaction of chlorine with sediment in water mains. TTHM's were detected in the distribution system for an average of 68.7 ppb; which is below the MCL of 100 ppb. "Note that the MCL for TTHM's does not apply for small systems, said McNabb. "We are voluntarily testing for HAC's and TTHM's," said McNabb. "Because we are concerned about these levels and are taking steps to reduce them to provide the maximum possible protection to the people of Cohasset.

"Since HAC's and TTHM's are caused by the reaction of chlorine and sediment in water, we expect that the flushing of the water pipes, our continued distribution system improvements, and planned improvements to the Lily Pond Water Treatment plant will continue to reduce the levels of HAC's and TTHM's," McNabb said.

Total Haloacetic Acids (HAC) – A byproduct from chlorination of water. "While HAC's were detected at 61.9 ppb, and the MCL is 60 ppb, this is not a violation because the MCL does not apply to small systems, under 10,000 populations, like Cohasset. The Water Commission is taking action to reduce HAC levels, by regular flushing of the water distribution system and by changes to the operation of the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant," McNabb said.

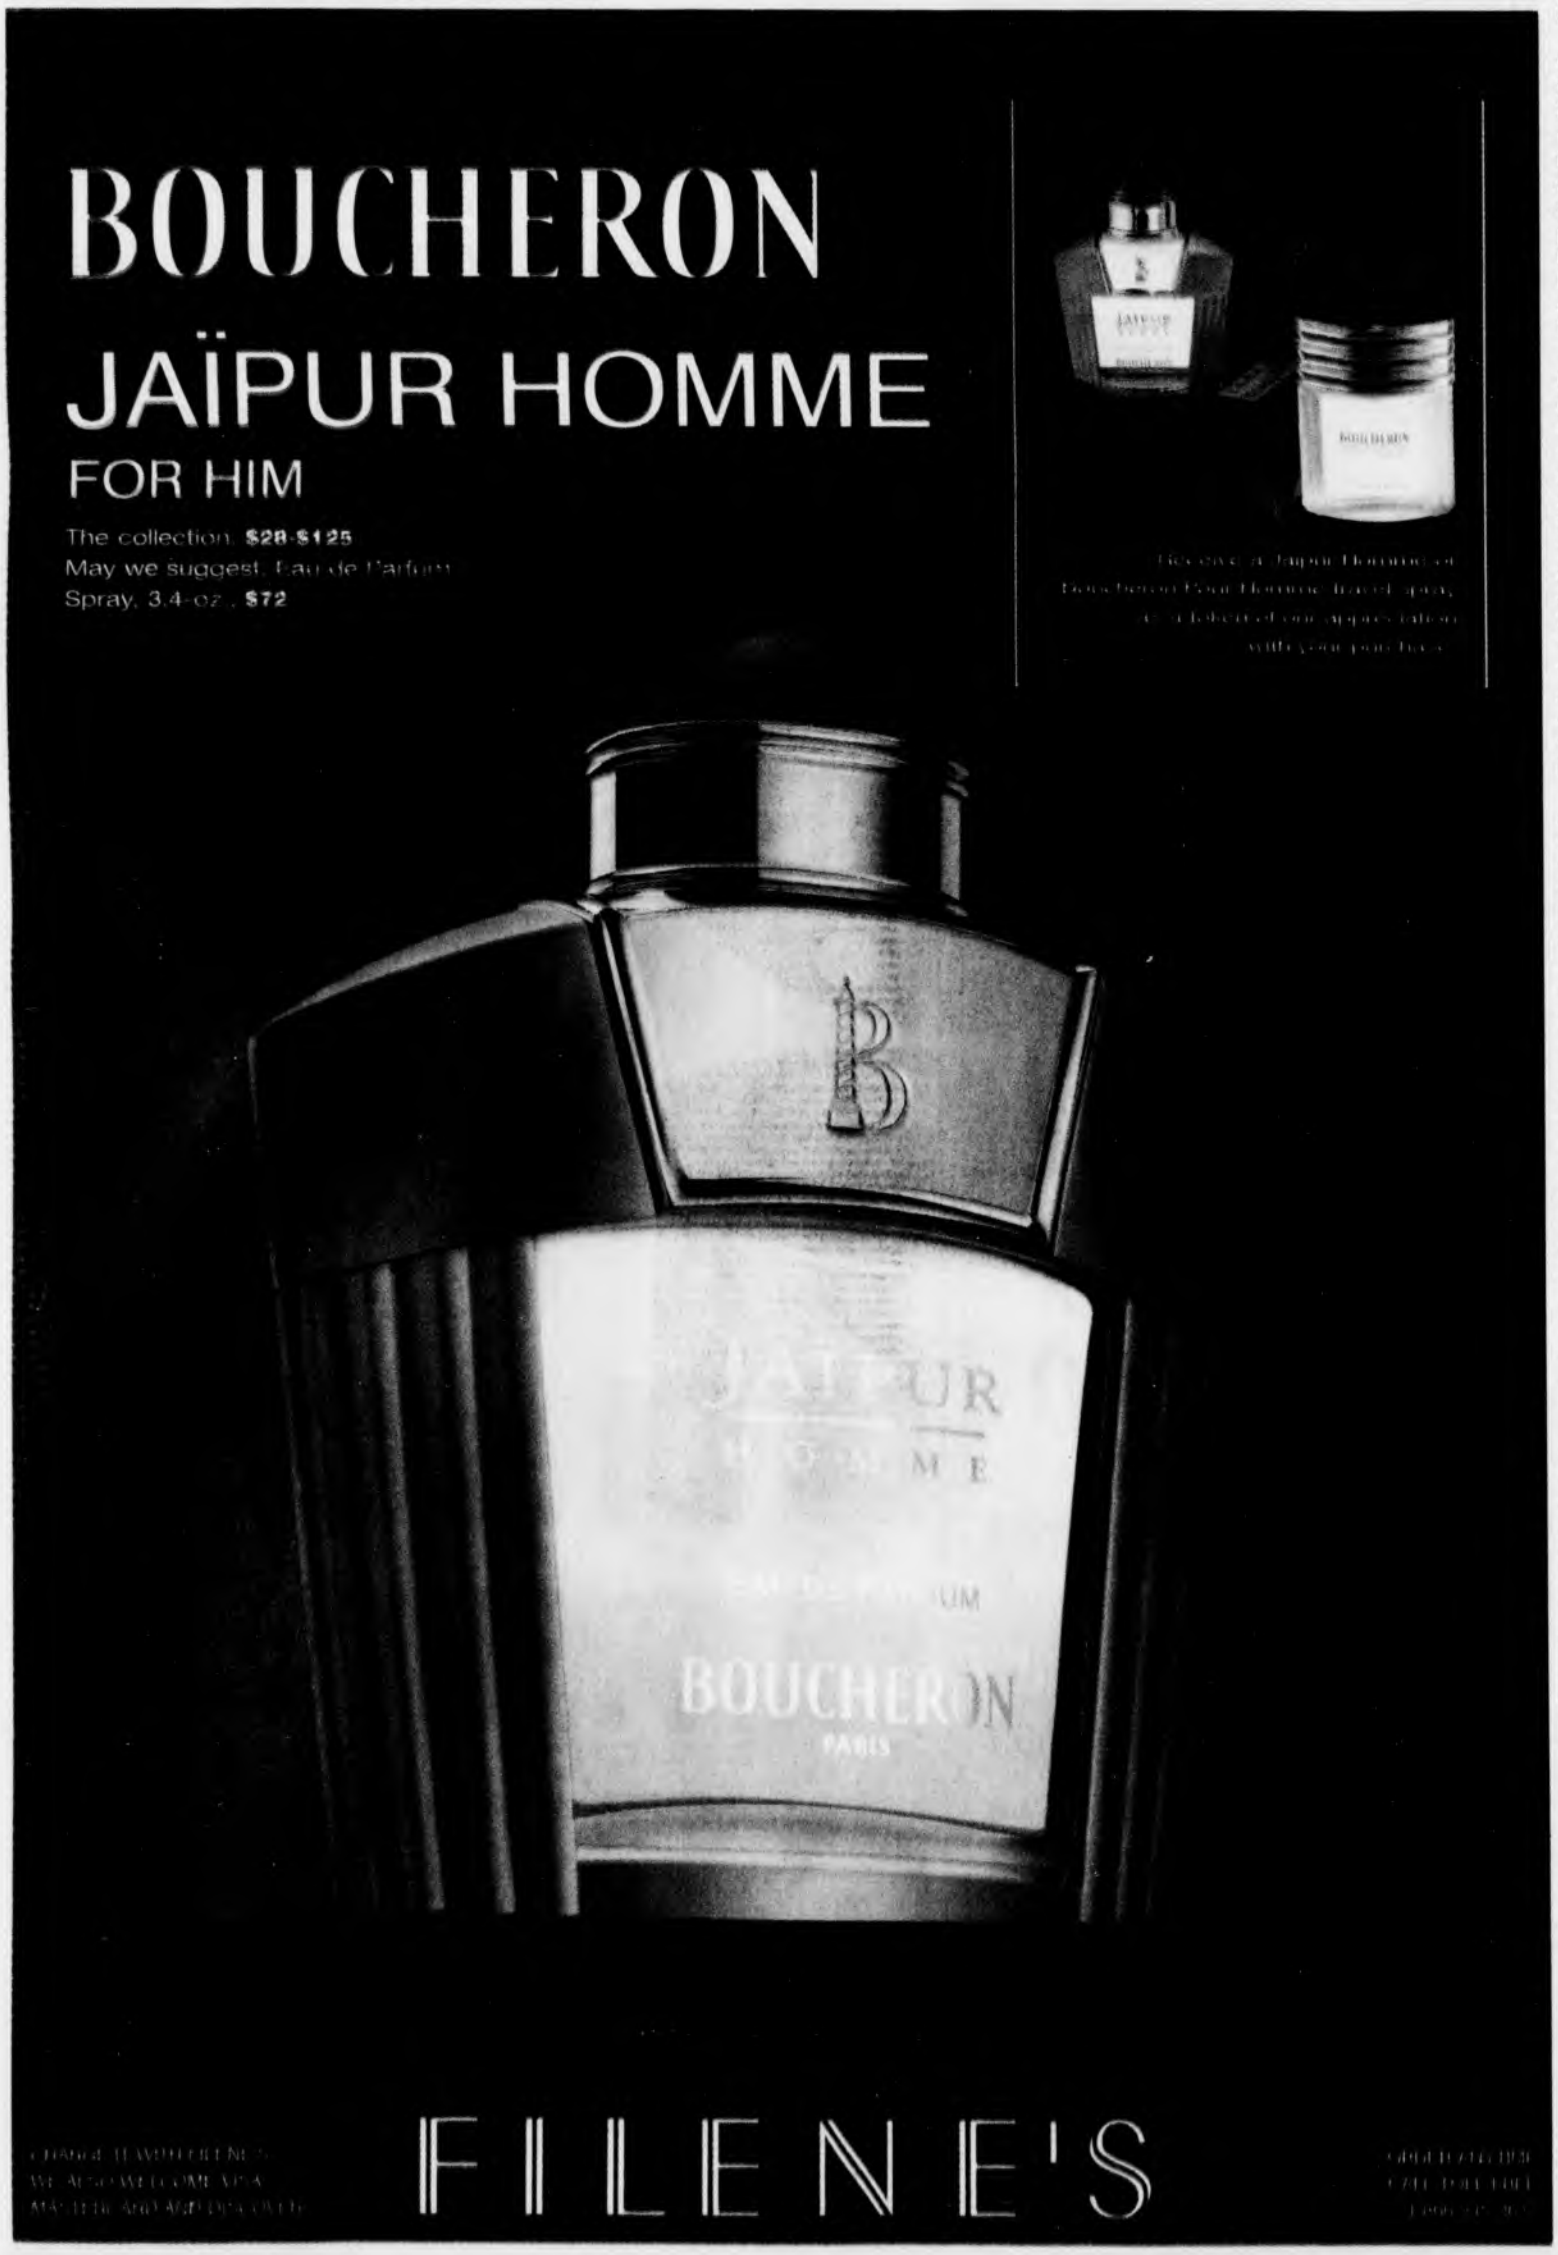
Turbidity – a measure of the amount of sediment in the water. From daily testing, which is an overall measure of water quality, the highest turbidity detected was 0.07 NTU (Nephelometric Turbidity Units), lower than the regulatory limit of 5 NTU.

Sodium. Detected 21.2 ppm. There is no MCL for sodium, but it is recommended that people on salt restricted diets consult with their physicians when the level is over 20 ppm.

Sulfate. Detected 29.9 ppm. There is no MCL for sulfate, which is unregulated but which the water dept. is required to include in our regular annual tests.

Hexachlorobutadiene. Detected at 0.6 ppb. There is no MCL for Hexachlorobutadiene, which is a chemical used to make rubber compounds, used as a solvent, to make lubricants, used as a heat transfer liquid and hydraulic fluid.

Copies of the 2003 Water Quality Report are available at Town Hall, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, and at the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant.



Outsourcing school cleaning could be cost-saving measure

Town Hall, police station, also included

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

While Cohasset schools will retain some of their custodians – the bulk of school cleaning could be handled by an outside contracted service come July.

The service provider would also be responsible for cleaning the Town Hall, the police station and the public restrooms slated for the former Hagerty building at Mariners Park off Parker Avenue.

The town, with School Committee's unanimous approval, is soliciting bids for the service that can be submitted to the Town Manager's office until 10 a.m., May 8.

It's all part of an effort to look at different ways of doing business in order to save money, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Haddad said the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library has been cleaned by an outside service since it opened nearly two months ago. "It's worked well so far," he said.

Haddad said the town spends about $200,000 on routine maintenance including two employees assigned to the schools. That does not include the cost of nine school custodians.

He said there may be some layoffs if the town opts for the contracted services. "But it's too early to tell what the impact is going to be," Haddad said.

While Supt. Edward Malvey doesn't see outsourcing the cleaning service as saving money, he agrees it is necessary to keep Deer Hill and middle-high schools — which are being renovated and expanded to the tune of $41 million — and the five-year-old Osgood School clean.

"We are under-manned and we've known that for a good number of years."
— Supt. Edward Malvey

"If there are savings attached to it, we'd welcome that," Malvey said. "But I don't honestly think there will be tremendous savings given the use of the buildings."

He explained the buildings need to be cleaned to a "higher quality" to protect the town's investment. Malvey said the schools currently have five custodians at the middle-high school, two at Deer Hill and two at Osgood, which is two less than a study conducted several years ago recommended.

"We are under-manned and we've known that for a good number of years," Malvey said, explaining that years ago when the old Osgood was open there were a total 14-16 school custodians. He said layoffs are possible, but a minimum of five to six custodians "to tend to many tasks" would still be needed if the town does go with outsourcing.

Malvey said the custodial union is opposed to the outsourcing plan.

"If they had their choice, they would prefer more custodians were hired to assist them," he said.

Currently the town handles general maintenance of the school buildings that includes changing filters in the HVAC, replacing light bulbs, painting when needed, general repairs and the like but does not do the cleaning, which has been handled by the custodial staff.

Haddad said because of cutbacks at the state level and the need for a Prop. 2-1/2 override, town officials explained at Town Meeting the town would try to find more cost-effective ways of doing business. He said if the bids demonstrate that hiring an outside contractor for cleaning is more expensive, the town would revisit the issue.

The cleaning service would be responsible for cleaning school restrooms and locker rooms on a nightly basis among myriad other duties including major cleaning during school vacations and over the summer.

School maintenance issues are nothing new. Back in 1999, Haddad looked into having a private company clean and maintain the schools. But the bids received showed outsourcing would not save any money. However, two of the schools' custodians were subsequently transferred to the DPW to become maintenance workers. Haddad said he is more optimistic this time around because the bid package is much more detailed so the town would know the exact cost of cleaning each building. He also explained the economy is different than in 1999 – a fact that might attract more bidders.

Restrooms are being constructed at the Center for Student Coastal Research in the former Hagerty building at Mariners Park. Haddad said cleaning the new restrooms was part in the bid package to see if it would be cost effective to include them. The center has agreed to clean the restrooms, but could pay the town for the service.

He said the fire department and DPW are not included in the bid package because those departments handle their own cleaning.

exploring home delivery of books and other items for people who can't make it to the library.

Rafferty started in her new position shortly after the new library opened. She said in her first two weeks on the job, the trustees and 17 full and part-time staff were very welcoming, especially Husband, who, as the former director, helped her with the transition. "It's a wonderful staff," she said. "Very professional, very friendly."

As far as her own reading taste goes, Rafferty likes a little bit of everything: nonfiction, classic novels, mysteries, biographies and books about politics, too. That's no surprise, however, when you consider that diversity and variety are what attracted Rafferty to libraries to begin with.

"I like libraries because they're cultural centers, intellectual centers — they bring the world to everyone," she said. "Especially a community library — it is the community center."

Along that note, Rafferty encouraged residents visiting the new library to stop in and introduce themselves.

Library Trustee Patience Towle said Rafferty was an obvious choice out of the 12 qualified applicants that the search committee considered in January.

"She immediately stood out from all the other candidates, both in terms of her enthusiasm and her experience," Towle said. "Our new building struck her as an positive opportunity rather than an overwhelming challenge."

"She's extraordinarily well respected by her colleagues," said Sheila Evans, also a Library Trustee and the chairman of the search committee. "We feel extremely lucky to have been able to hire her."

Buttonwood hosts coffee with authors

Buttonwood Books and Toys in Cohasset will present "Coffee With The Authors" on Tuesday, April 29 at the Atlantica Restaurant in Cohasset from 9:45 to 11:30 a.m. Enjoy a continental breakfast and a stimulating morning with three authors as they discuss the art of writing and their latest works.

Featured authors will be Rosemary Mahoney for "The Singular Pilgrim: Travels on Sacred Ground", Jacquelyn Mitchard for "Twelve Times Blessed" and Jessica Shattuck for "The Hazards of Good Breeding". Mahoney's book is a collection of travel essays that chronicle her journey along ancient paths traveled by ancient pilgrims. Her previous works include "Whoredom in Kimmage" and "A Likely Story: One Summer with Lillian Hellman".

Mitchard, author of "The Deep End of the Ocean", the book selected by Oprah Winfrey to launch her book club, sets her latest novel on Cape Cod and traces the dynamics of family change within a single year.

"The Hazards of Good Breeding" by Shattuck is the debut novel from a new and innovative novelist. Shattuck weaves with great skill the tale of a family on the brink of change with thoughtful insight and humor. Advance reservations and ticketing are required and can be made by calling Buttonwood at 781-383-2665. Tickets are $13 per person, non-refundable.

Images for the ages

It's been an historic week — one that has given us images that will last for ages. How can anybody forget the scenes of the Iraqi people as they joyfully smashed a toppled Saddam statue?

"I'm 49, but I never lived a single day," exclaimed Yusef Abed Kazim as he pounded the base of Saddam's idol with a sledge hammer. "Only now will I start living."

Other Iraqis draped a previously outlawed flag across the despot's statue shortly before it was toppled. When the bust fell, throngs of people descended upon it to vent their fury. Some enthusiasts chopped the statue's head off and dragged it through the streets of Baghdad to exhibit their freedom of speech.

"Bye Bye Saddam," read a sign held aloft by a young man. "Thank you, Mr. Bush," howled another Iraqi man with delight to TV viewers across the globe. One Iraqi youth ran a victory lap around Baghdad's Paradise Square while holding an American flag aloft. A group of Iraqi Kurds displayed Old Glory with an image of Rocky Balboa emblazoned on it. Some Iraqis burned photographs of Saddam while others smashed portraits of the dictator on highway murals.

Other Iraqis ransacked Saddam's presidential palaces , the Ministry of Information, (has anybody seen Baghdad Bob lately?) and the Palace of "Justice". The pillaging of these buildings is similar to what happened in Egypt when the Jewish people were set free from slavery 4,000 years ago by another tyrant. The Old Testament states:, "they plundered the Egyptians."

Saddam, like the ancient Egyptian Pharoah, amassed his wealth by forcing the Iraqis to bear unimaginable burdens. Freedom of worship, the right to peacefully assemble, having open government meetings were non existent under his tyranny. Saddam's cruelty to those who questioned or opposed him is now being revealed daily. Some of his thugs engaged in:

- gouging the eyes of prisoners;
- electric shock to extract confessions from political opponents;
- rape, beatings, starvation and other indescribable means of torture

The "Butcher of Baghdad" also used chemical weapons against Iraqi Kurds and Iranian soldiers during the Iraq-Iran war of 1980-1988.

It's fitting that Iraq's liberation from Saddam is taking place as the Passover celebration and Lent season are underway. Both observances symbolize freedom and hope. Passover recalls the Jewish people's liberation by Yahweh from Egypt and their journey to Israel. Lent is a season that recalls the suffering of Jesus Christ as he died upon the cross to liberate humankind from the penalty of sin. Christians believe his death and resurrection from the grave offer new life and hope to those who trust in him.

The freedom now being sampled by Baghdad's citizens is laying the foundation for a new nation, conceived in liberty and without weapons of mass destruction to be developed by a despot. This reality should be encouraging to people around the globe that yearn for freedom from tyrants. Saddam's downfall is also a reminder that the basic desire for freedom can only be repressed to a point. The American Revolution, the overthrow of the French monarchy by its citizens, and the collapse of communism in Eastern Europe are proof that history does repeat itself. The Axis of Evil had better take note of this reality. History is not on their side. The German scholar Fredrick Hegel once stated, "History repeats itself, because man learns nothing from history."

The struggle for freedom will always include the ultimate sacrifice. From the shores of Normandy, France, on D-Day to the deserts of Iraq, the price for freedom has been high. To date there are nearly 134 soldiers from the coalition troops who have died in Operation Iraqi Freedom. These casualties are also a somber reminder of how awful war is and that it must always be waged as a last resort when all diplomatic avenues have been exhausted.

It now appears the struggle against Saddam's henchmen is entering its final days. When victory is declared it will truly begin a season of hope and peace for all Iraqis.

Parking ticket upsets visitor

TO THE EDITOR:

On April 9, a very rainy and windy day, I took two out-of-town friends to Cohasset Village for an afternoon of shopping and lunch — three mature women off for a pleasant few hours together to celebrate the arrival of a new grandchild. I parked between Pilgrim Bank and French Memories. I conducted a bank transaction and then took my friends to a nearby restaurant for lunch. There was no parking ticket on my car when I returned. I was assisting one of my guests, who has a knee injury and is not sure-footed, into the car. Suddenly a policeman shouted to me from his cruiser parked across the street in front of the gas station. I couldn't hear him so I crossed the street in the wind and the rain and the traffic to the driver's window of the police car where the officer was beginning to write out a ticket. He explained that there was a new regulation limiting parking to one hour. I asked him where was the sign was. He said that the regulation was just going into effect and pointed out a sign down the street. He told me that he knew it was ridiculous but he had to do it and that I could protest to the Town Manager, Mark Haddad. I stood in the rain and waited for him to finish writing out the ticket – a very inhospitable ending to our outing in Cohasset.

Although we intended to linger in Cohasset to shop, we left immediately. The incident was upsetting. I find a $25 ticket for parking in Cohasset Village to be excessive. This policy will only serve to drive shoppers away from Cohasset. I might add that there were empty parking spaces on both sides of my car.

Today I went to the town manager's office to see the Town Manager and to request a review of the situation. I was told by a very pleasant office assistant that the Town Manager wasn't there but I could fill out a form requesting a review of the situation. Later I received a phone call informing me that the Town Manager had rejected my request but I could request a hearing. When I asked who would be conducting the hearing I was told it would be the same individual, Mark Haddad. I think the outcome is predictable.

I am very disappointed in the way I was treated in Cohasset. In the future, I will not take my guests to Cohasset Village. I will take them to Scituate or Duxbury which are much more hospitable to visitors.

Gomez appreciates wide range of support

TO THE EDITOR:

A heartfelt thanks to the town of Cohasset for your support of my campaign for Selectman. I appreciate the support and counsel that I received from across the political spectrum and from newcomers and long-time residents alike. Our town's will to come together to support a fresh voice on the Board is nothing short of impressive. I look forward to working with all of you over the next year as I contribute to town life and prepare for next year's election.

Further, a great thanks to my team for their hard work and dedication — to my wife, Sarah, and my children for their patience and encouragement; to my committee and their families for their faith and hundreds of hours of work; and to all of our volunteers for their assistance.

Finally, congratulations to Michael Sullivan and his team for a very well run campaign and best wishes for a strong three years of service on the Board.

Cohasset is target of Logan overflights

TO THE EDITOR:

As most of us have become aware, Cohasset is subject to an inordinate amount of low altitude airplane traffic from Logan airport. Today, approximately 65 percent of all Logan traffic either departing or landing overflies the town.

Until recent years the percentage of flights over Cohasset was a negligible percentage of total operations at Logan. The town was a particularly desirable place to live partly because of the peace and quiet we enjoyed. That has changed. Today it is rare to have a day without the continuous, intrusive sound of airplanes overhead. It is making Cohasset a significantly less desirable place to live. The following history explains how and why we have become the target of all these overflights.

In 1979 a citizens group from Quincy, elected representatives from Boston and major political figures in Massachusetts petitioned the FAA to alleviate aircraft noise from flights departing runway 22R at Logan. Runway 22R points southwest, and the residents of South Boston, Quincy, and Squantum were severely affected by jet noise from departing flights. Senators Kennedy and Tsongas, Speaker of the House Tip O'Neill, Representatives Moakley and Markey, Mayor Tobin of Quincy, senior officials from the Department of Transportation, the FAA and Massport cooperated in crafting a solution. The outcome was codified in the FAA Record of Decision of 1980. It was to reroute 22R departures away from South Boston and Quincy by requiring planes to turn sharply to the east on leaving the runway, proceed out Boston Harbor and then south and west with shore crossings in Hull, Hingham and Cohasset. In other words they moved the noise from them and onto us. In this process Cohasset was not represented.

In 1983 the FAA working with this same group plus 12 affected communities immediately surrounding Boston — the Community Advisory Committee to Massport (CAC) — instituted a computer based tool known as the Preferential Advisory System (PRAS) to automate the selection of runways based on a set of rules of usage. The PRAS was a political tool to further decrease the effect of overflights on the close-in communities. It recommended among other things a doubling of the arrival traffic over Cohasset on runway 33L from approximately 23 percent of all arrivals to 42 percent. In this process Cohasset was not represented.

In 1986 the FAA again working with the CAC revised the PRAS and issued tower orders which read as follows: "Between midnight and 6:30 A.M., the supervisor shall ensure the use of the following runway priorities – Land 33L, Depart 15R In an attempt to further reduce aircraft noise, particularly during the hours of 0000 and 0600 local time, it becomes even more important for us (whenever wind conditions permit) to use runway 15R for takeoffs and 33L for landings." In other words, route all nighttime traffic over Cohasset. The combination of the 22R departures and 33L landings means, in fact, that practically all four-engine cargo planes either departing or landing Logan in the midnight to dawn hours are preferentially routed over the town.

In 1996 President Clinton signed Executive Order 12898 which read in part "To the greatest extent practicable and permitted by law, and consistent with the principles set forth in the report on the National Performance Review, each Federal agency shall make achieving environmental justice part of its mission by identifying and addressing, as appropriate, disproportionately high and adverse human health or environmental effects of its programs, policies, and activities on minority populations and low-income populations in the United States" Airplane noise has been defined by the FAA as having adverse health and environmental effects. The FAA and Massport solutions have been, therefore, to preferentially favor air traffic routes which move noise from minority populations to non-minority populations i.e., Cohasset and South Shore towns.

In 1995 the Logan Airside Improvement Planning Project EIS/EIR was initiated. Among other aspects of the Project was the building of runway 14/32. Runway 14/32 is in direct line with Cohasset and planes using this runway will also overfly the town. Further, during the Airside Improvements Planning Project, new runway combinations were recommended with the goal of reducing noise impacts by overflying fewer communities. The inverse, of course, means increasing noise over the remaining communities. This perverse goal is the current FAA position. The effect of 14/32 and this goal will mean still more flights over Cohasset.

If all of these directives and orders were implemented, Cohasset would suffer 80 percent of all traffic into or out of Logan. It is hard to imagine such a devastating outcome, yet that is the goal so that others will be spared. Already it is rare to have a moment of silence in the town. Cohasset would rival Winthrop in the degree of impact from aircraft operations at Logan. It is also worth noting that the northern and western suburbs have not been targeted.

All these decisions have created an environmental disaster for Cohasset. We have asked Ellen Roy Herzfelder, Secretary of Environmental Affairs for Massachusetts, to reexamine the assumptions of the FEIR for the Airside Improvement Project so that a fair and impartial examination of the facts can be undertaken. The reasons seem more than adequate. In January of 2002, in response to a request by the Federal Aviation Administration for a review of the aircraft delay data which Massport intended to use in its Final Environmental Impact Report (FEIR), the MITRE Corporation issued an analysis based on FAA guidelines which concluded that there was "little benefit attributable to the new runway" and, in fact, the delays were exaggerated by a factor of 10. The results of this analysis were not included in the FEIR. We believe that this constitutes concealment of a material fact and is sufficient to justify a Notice of Project Change. Since the environmental and economic analyses contained in the FEIR rest on the assumptions regarding delay, they must be reexamined in light of the MITRE report findings.

We can't afford Greenbush

LOCAL VIEW

OVE PYGH WILCHE

SEQ CHAPTER \h \r 1I can only welcome the news that the MBTA has decided to put the construction of the Greenbush Line on a six-month hold. In addition, I find it positive and encouraging that Secretary of Transportation Daniel Grabauskas plans to take an objective look at the project. All we need now is that Governor Romney, who seems to have a good sense of business matters, evaluates the economic feasibility of this venture. This would undoubtedly mean the end of what has turned into a financial nightmare.

The MBTA has, of course, claimed that economic problems have not caused the decision. This is understandable. They have announced several price tags over the years. These were all exact, carved in stone, and indisputable. The perfect example was when former Governor Cellucci set a conditional $400 million limit and the MBTA immediately announced a "bulls-eye" at $434 million. Today the estimated cost is $470 million and, following precedent, tomorrow's cost will be higher, but still within budgetary limits.

What causes the economic calamity without making it a budget overrun is the fact that there was never a budget. The construction of the Greenbush line has followed a build/design model, i.e., there was never a finalized plan before the work began. This is the same as me building a home on a plot of land I do not own, without any permits, without any architectural plan, and the final price of the new home not being known until I have paid the last bill and settled all law suits.

Nevertheless, the MBTA chose this model and that is why they have put the project on hold. All the permits have not been obtained, all the land has not yet been acquired, and several issues are still to be settled with towns along the line. Still, officials express that economy is not the problem, but claim that the construction of the Greenbush line is a commitment, that it falls within the capital budget, and that canceling the project would be a catastrophe.

As so often before, the argument is flawed. Had the $100 million already spent on the Greenbush project been used to implement cost efficient transportation alternatives, we would, as of today, have had public transportation throughout the Greenbush corridor. So, canceling the project is not a catastrophe if the train is replaced with relevant economically feasible alternatives.

The MBTA may believe that the project is an indisputable commitment due to its status as part of the Central Artery Agreement. Contrary to common belief, the agreement allows for a substitution of a project if it is economically or environmentally problematic. The Greenbush project is troubled in both ways and thus could and should be substituted, i.e., canceled in preference of a better solution.

Finally, stating that the project falls within the capital budget is a questionable argument. Already today the MBTA budget is stretched to its limits and adding the cost of the Greenbush project could be the drop in the bucket that blows the budget. Nevertheless, the argument has been used in an attempt to convince us that the state would not gain anything if the project were canceled. Here we have to remember that the MBTA's largest funding source is one-fifth of the state's sales tax revenue which currently amounts to $684 million a year. An adjustment (cutback) of this amount would definitely help the state budget.

So, the question Governor Romney has to ask is, "Can we afford to build the Greenbush Line?" The answer is a unanimous "NO!" In times when a budget shortfall causes cutbacks on far more important aid, we cannot allow any state agency to accept budget overruns. It is, of course, important that the South Shore communities get public transportation. But it should be set up in a financially feasible manner, not as an uncontrolled skyrocketing spin of extreme expenditure.

Civil War won't die

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Gosh, if this keeps up the Civil War may well be over — in another hundred years or so.

Those degenerate damn Yankees have gone and put up a statue of their hero Abraham Lincoln in the holiest of holy places in the South, Richmond, Va., the capital of the old Confederacy.

At the same time, those reconstructed rebels in the Georgia House have voted to remove the Confederate battle design from the state flag of Georgia and replace it with a circle of stars and three red and white bars vaguely reminiscent of the Confederacy.

Next thing you know, they'll make grandpa take down his autographed picture of Jefferson Davis, burn his KKK regalia and pour his stash of Jack Daniel down the sink.

Needless to say, neither the statue nor the new flag was greeted with cheers south of the Mason-Dixon line where a good portion of the population apparently still hasn't heard what General Grant did to General Lee at Appomatox.

"Lincoln is regarded in the South , and justly so, as a bad guy," said Bragdon Bowling, commander of the Virginia Division of the Sons of Confederate Veterans. "There hasn't been any clamoring for a Lincoln statue here."

Next thing you know, they'll make grandpa take down his autographed picture of Jefferson Davis...

Bowling's great-grandfather fought in General Lee's army 138 years ago and the Sons are still fighting the war as is the letter writer to the Richmond Times Dispatch who called Lincoln "this country's most notorious war criminal."

I can only hope the Sons and their friends haven't developed any weapons of mass destruction in the years that have passed since April 9, 1865, which is still "a day of infamy" in the South.

The flag dispute in Georgia has been going on for at least two years with such vehemence that it cost Gov. Roy Barnes his job and elected Sonny Perdue, the state's first Republican governor in 130 years.

The Confederate battle design, which was added to the state flag in 1956 when desegregation was a hot topic, had taken up about two-thirds of the banner when Barnes succumbed to the pressure of black legislators and shrunk it to postcard-size.

The move was so popular with the great-grandsons and daughters of the old Confederacy that they turned Barnes out to pasture in the election of 2002 and brought in Perdue, who soon found out that he couldn't handle the crisis either.

Perdue proposed a new flag made up of two thick red stripes and one white one with a blue field emblazoned with 13 stars and the state seal in the upper left corner. Only a historian would recognize it as the old Confederate Stars and Bars.

The flag design passed the Georgia House by a vote of 111 to 67 (with black legislators walking out after the vote) and is expected to sail through the Senate but it still faces a referendum of the same voters who turned Barnes out in March.

And, by the by, along the way someone added the words "In God we trust" to the white stripe on the new flag.

For God's sake, don't let the Ninth District Court of Appeals in California hear about that one!

HEALTH NOTES

Why we should pay attention to storm drains and catch basins

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

We're beginning a new program designed to make our storm drains and catch basins better at managing the runoff which comes from our roads and parking lots.

Tuesday April 22 is Earth Day. Cohasset is celebrating Earth Day this year with a very special project: storm-drain assessment. Half of the bad things which enter our precious water resources go in from the surface of the earth. Most often, rainwater or snow melt drains into our retainment systems (catch basins and storm drains) and then, carries untreated pollution into our ponds and streams. This year, the EPA is bringing the historic Clean Water Act its most important challenge: It's going after the smaller, but infinitely more numerous almost casual depositors of trash, debris, and other undesirable material into our storm-water and drainage systems. Cohasset has in excess of 1300 storm-water drainage and catchment systems. You see them at every corner of our streets and roads. Every year more and more pollution goes into our waters from these sources. Carl Sestito, our DPW manager, spends more than $50,000 yearly cleaning out these collectors of debris, sand, oil, gasoline, food wrappers, etc.; and sediment which kills much of the biological matter which provides treatment to the water entering our lakes, estuaries and streams.

This year, we're beginning a new program designed to make our storm drains and catch basins better at managing the runoff which comes from our roads and parking lots. Jack Buckley and the Center for Student Coastal Research (CSCR) has begun a Health Board sponsored program to identify and keep track of our storm drains. Using a grant from the Executive office of Environmental Affairs, Cohasset has begun a program of mapping and describing our storm drains. Most of the work is highly automated using aerial mapping, but someone needs to go out and verify what is there. So, on Tuesday, April 22, Earth Day, high school student volunteers from the CSCR will be going out with Cohasset DPW workers, who are doing routine maintenance on some of our storm drains. Using instructions and forms provided by the Board of Health the students will describe and classify the catch basins they see. The data will then be used to augment the ongoing aerial survey which maps these structures. This important work will eventually result in a program of upgrading our storm-water management structures to do a better job of processing the water which passes through them to our water resources. This very specialized form of assessment will provide important information about where and how our water bodies receive much of their harmful pollution.

Infant immunization

This is National Infant Immunization Week. Immunizations are one of the most important ways parents can protect their children against serious diseases. Immunization protects families and communities. Children who are not immunized increase the chance that others will get the disease.

Each day 11,000 babies are born who will need to be immunized against 11 vaccine preventable diseases before age two. We can prevent more diseases than ever before, yet despite recent gains in childhood immunization coverage, more than 20 percent of our nation's two-year-olds are still missing one or more of the recommended immunizations. Infants and young children are particularly vulnerable to infectious diseases, which is why it is critical that they be protected through immunization. Parents need to take responsibility for their child's vaccinations. As a parent, you should become an informed consumer and keep a record of each immunization visit.

Low immunization coverage is an issue that impacts the entire community. Therefore, community resources, and more importantly, community participation is essential to increasing immunization coverage. A decision to vaccinate a child is a decision to not only protect that individual child, but to protect the community as well by reducing the spread of disease to those who have not been vaccinated either by choice or because of medical reasons, such as children with leukemia.

Immunizations are extremely safe thanks to advancements in medical research and ongoing review by doctors, researchers, and public health officials. Children are far more likely to be harmed by serious infectious diseases than by immunization.

No 'I do' to wedding bells in jail cells

COMMENTARY

ALICE COYLE

I thought it might be tough to top this month's bridal supplement theme — honeymoon havens in the Poconos. I was wrong.

For the June edition, I'm suggesting a fresh new nuptial notion — Jailhouse weddings.

Yes, I'm referring to saying your "I do's" in prison, the slammer, the hoosegow.

And why not?

After all, a state appeals judge recently ruled a Plymouth County inmate can wed behind bars despite strong objections from Sheriff Joseph McDonough, who in his opposition to this conjugal concession happens to be 100 percent right.

After all aren't people serving time for doing crimes supposed to lose the rights and privileges law-abiding folk enjoy? For better or worse, marriage is still a sacred institution, one that certainly should not be celebrated or officiated in a penal institution.

And that doesn't even take into consideration that the incarcerated individual looking to tie the knot in the cell block is doing time for beating up at least a couple of former girlfriends. Who could be convinced a third time would be a charm?

With the inmate's violent record in mind and concern about setting a bad prenuptial precedent, McDonough denied his request to marry months ago. The inmate in turn, sued McDonough, and the judge unbelievably sided with the prisoner.

Only in America.

Next thing you know, Fox will be doing a reality TV show popularizing the practice "Wedding Bells in Jail Cells."

Once we allow marriages behind bars, aren't we opening a proverbial can of worms in the can, and inviting requests to host other significant ceremonies in the clink?

How about graduations complete with caps and gowns and pomp and circumstance played on the prison PA system?

Then again, wedlock in the lockup has interesting possibilities. Imagine the size of the file you could fit inside a five-tiered, butter cream frosted wedding cake?

Following tradition the bride could wear something old, something new, something stolen and something blue. Although I'm not sure satin and tulle go well with prison stripes.

As for the wedding party, the warden would no doubt make an outstanding best man, and it would give a whole new meaning to the title "Matron" of Honor.

There are plenty of Bibles in the big house for a reading or two at the ceremony and the reception could be held under a nice white tent in the prison yard. A real outlaw band would be hired to entertain the guests —family, friends and fellow inmates. Forget the Macarena and the Electric Slide, my friends, you've never done the Hokey Pokey until you've done it in the pokey.

Of course the honeymoon will have to wait until his parole comes up, but until then the newlyweds will have their matrimonial memories to cherish and cling to.

Sounds ridiculous, and it is especially in these tough fiscal times when our state's prison system can't find the funding for really important programs for the more than 20,000 serving sentences. Who can blame Sheriff McDonough for wanting to focus on rehabilitating inmates rather than marrying them off?

Prison isn't supposed to be fun. We don't allow inmates to vote, or dine out or catch the latest movie at the multiplex and we shouldn't permit them to get married while incarcerated.

Isn't the divorce rate high enough in this country?

Reserve the real ball and chain for the prisoners, and leave matrimony to those who can flourish in the union on the outside.

POLITICAL NOTES

Early retirement legislation update

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D- Hingham, member of the Committee on Public Service announced House Bill 3404 providing for municipal early retirement was voted favorably out of committee and sent to the House for debate. The bill provides local leaders the option of adopting an early retirement incentive program for municipal employees. The legislation would make available an additional five years of age or credible service to eligible employees.

"In order to best deal with this fiscal challenge we must explore all viable options that could alleviate some of the financial burdens on our communities. This bill would give cities and towns another alternative in dealing with local aid cuts that could save jobs," Bradley said.

Flag depository at American Legion

The American Legion, George H. Mealy Post 118 in Cohasset has a way for the public to be able to bring them their tattered and worn flags so they may be properly and ceremoniously destroyed. The Flag Depository, located in front of the legion post at 98 Summer St., has the look and shape of an American flag. This solid metal Flag Depository protects the flags until they are removed for storage and kept until the time of the desecration ceremony. The Herb Chambers Automobile Dealerships made this new service possible through a donation to the post. Everyone is invited to bring his or her retired flags to the deposito-

'Beacon of Hope'

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of The Social Service League of Cohasset, I would like to extend thanks to those who helped to make our recent celebration of the 50th anniversary of our Consignment Shop a tremendous success. More than 75 local businesses and individuals rallied together by donating various goods and services for the auction to support the work of the League and applaud the staff and volunteers who run our Consignment Shop. Many thanks to Anthony Everett, who ran the live auction without missing a beat, to Anne Czerkawski and her ensemble for a spectacular evening of jazz and to the Cohasset Golf Club and their staff for their part in the evening's success.

From scholarship funds and professional counseling services, to "Meals on Wheels" for seniors and a highly-acclaimed domestic violence intervention program with Wellspring in Hull, the League continues to be a beacon of hope for people of all ages.

We are grateful to all of our supporters, who allow us to help those in need navigate their way to a safer harbor. Many thanks.

War coverage overshadows budget crisis on Beacon Hill

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

For 10,000 years, war has been humankind's favorite story. Not happiest, but most engrossing. And with modern videocast and embedded photographers, it's a better story than ever. No one (almost) is pro war, but no one (almost) exposed to CNN this month could tear themselves away. At the Statehouse that's understandably led to a vacuum of interest – or perhaps the reverse of a vacuum. Problems persist; debate about solutions keeps the schedule packed. But the discussions, held inside the building, seemed incapable of radiating beyond Beacon Hill so long as "Breaking News: Explosions Rock Baghdad" was cycling like a mantra, entrancing the audience and absorbing virtually all its attention. Legalizing marijuana; letting illegal immigrants have driver's licenses so they'll be safer drivers; letting public schools cancel school bus service and adopt a four-day school week: all these and more were discussed, but almost as moot points.

Even if the war weren't occupying 90 percent of the airtime and newsprint, there's really not a lot of energy for change on Beacon Hill. An overwhelming status-quo majority party (the Democrats) controls the Legislature that will pass judgment on the proposals of a change agent (Gov. Mitt Romney) in the governor's office. The majority has a huge political stake in proving the change agent wrong.

This dynamic could be seen in the work product of task forces assigned by House Speaker Thomas Finneran to study how the budget should be balanced this year in the face of a $3 billion projected deficit and no appetite (yet) for tax hikes. The emphasis was on cutting, not restructuring; representatives went to some lengths to demonstrate, legitimately, that the numbers underlying the Romney budget aren't reliable enough to guarantee balanced books in the coming fiscal year.

Yet the representatives preserved such budget items as the Boston Municipal Court, often viewed as nice to have but somewhat duplicative and not essential. Eliminating that court would be seen the way a lot of reform would be right now: a Romney victory.

Make no mistake, most Democrats are interested in handing him a defeat, and here's how many predict it will be done: propose gigantic cuts in programs and services, and say those cuts are the realistic alternative to Romney's "phony" numbers. Require the governor to take accountability for the cuts that his no-new-taxes mantra requires. Let the public decide: "Republican gimmicks" and "inflexibility," or Democratic "responsible leadership?" That's how the Democrats are hoping people will see it.

Even if the war weren't occupying 90 percent of the airtime and newsprint, there's really not a lot of energy for change on Beacon Hill.

• House members ponder ways to balance books — Members of budget task forces appointed by Speaker Finneran to explore Education Financing, Health and Human Services, and Local Government released their work products Wednesday. The ideas are being forwarded to the House Ways and Means Committee for its consideration. The findings in brief:

Four-day school week — Cut local aid 15 to 18 percent — End local mandate for school transportation — Examine the opening of new charter schools — Eliminate the office of Educational Quality and Accountability — Delay jobless benefit eligibility for laid off teachers — Eliminate some corruption safeguards to lower costs in municipal construction process — Exempt small towns from wage-floor protection law — Eliminate many local mandates — New early retirement program at local level — Increase parking fines, towing fees, gun permit fees — Cut higher education funding by 20 percent — Create a special commission to study Romney's higher education reform — Reject UMass campus realignment — Maintain foundation level K-12 aid — Delay changes to formula for education aid — Create special commission to invent new education aid formula — Do not cut early education — Allow continuance of bilingual education despite voter mandate — Consolidate elder personal care, nursing home care and home health care administration — Reject Romney consolidation of Executive Office of Elder Affairs and Health and Human Services — Do not increase state employee's share of health insurance — Adopt incentives to change state employees' use of health care to avoid expense — Close Fernald Developmental Center — Close some DMR facilities and move clients to community settings — Limit participation in Prescription Advantage; increase participant payments — Form bulk purchasing for Prescription Advantage, state employees and willing municipalities

• Hearings delve into issues from pot to parenting — It's in the rules: every bill should have a hearing before a committee votes yes or no on whether it's worthy of passage. Hearing season is heating up now, and last week: — The Public Safety Committee took testimony from Lt. Gov. Kerry Healey and district prosecutors on the state's drunk driving laws. There was broad support for measures requiring anyone who tests at a .08 blood-alcohol level to be presumed intoxicated, with challenges no longer allowed. Other measures would allow refusal to take a Breathalyzer to be held against a defendant in court. The committee also heard from a large turnout of immigrants, who argued in favor of a proposal to issue Massachusetts driver's licenses to illegal aliens. It was estimated that one third of the state's illegal immigrants would get licenses. Supporters said that would mean they'd develop the driving skills necessary to pass the license exam, and presumably be less inclined to flee the scene of an accident. Supporters said the state could take in $11 million a year issuing the immigrant licenses.

— The Public Service Committee scrapped Gov. Romney's veteran's-bonus proposal as too stingy. The governor proposed up to $1,000 a month replacement money for state-employee military personnel now serving in the Middle East; the committee amended that to cover the full difference between military pay and the worker's regular state salaries.

— Members of the Taxation Committee are again considering the idea of raising new revenue by increasing the excise tax on alcohol. Lobbyists for the industry said raising the tax could cost the state 2,300 jobs.

— The Criminal Justice Committee heard from advocates for marijuana decriminalization, who argued the state would save $23 million by dropping prosecution of pot possession. Voters in 19 districts approved non-binding referenda last fall in favor of decriminalization. On Beacon Hill, there are few lawmakers pushing the proposal.

• Romney plan to shake up pike authority draws mixed reaction — The governor argued he should have the power to name more members to the turnpike board and take control of it because he takes the heat for problems with the Big Dig. He's proposing expanding the board to nine from five members, to be hired and fired by the governor. The governor's right to remove board members was at the center of the controversy that cost Jane Swift her political viability. Romney says the turnpike spends much more than the state highway department to perform similar functions.

• Story of the week — Besides the war, the deepening impact of budget cuts and the new level of detail about possible responses were the most important matters making news.

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week. This week, BHRC reports local representatives' roll call attendance records for the 2003 session through April 11.

The House has held 52 roll call votes. BHRC tabulates the number of roll calls on which each representative was present and voting and then calculates that number as a percentage of the total roll call votes held. That percentage is the number commonly referred to as the roll call attendance record.

Several quorum roll calls, used to gather a majority of members onto the House floor to conduct business, are also included in the 52 roll calls. On the quorum roll calls, members simply vote "present" in order to indicate their presence in the chamber. When a representative does not indicate his presence on a quorum roll call, we count that as a roll call absence just like any other roll call absence.

LOCAL REPRESENTATIVES' ATTENDANCE RECORDS

The percentage listed next to the representative's name is the percentage of roll call votes for which the representative was present and voting. The number in parentheses represents the number of roll calls the representative missed.

RECORD PUBLIC OFFICIALS (H 176) - The Judiciary held a hearing on a bill allowing private citizens to record, with or without permission, communications with a public official in the course of his official duty.

FOUR-YEAR TERMS FOR LEGISLATORS (S 352) - A hearing was held before the Elections Laws Committee on a proposed constitutional amendment increasing the terms of state legislators from two years to four years.

ANTI-WAR PROTESTS AND TRAFFIC - A bill filed last week would criminalize the intentional blocking of traffic by a pedestrian and require anyone convicted of the crime to pay for all law enforcement and court costs associated with the illegal act. The measure was filed in response to recent actions by anti-war protesters across the nation.

MARIJUANA (S 207) - The Criminal Justice Committee heard extensive testimony from both sides on a proposal to decriminalize possession of less than an ounce of marijuana by persons over 17 years of age. The bill would impose a civil penalty similar to a speeding ticket.

MILITARY PAY - The Public Service Committee approved a new version of a bill providing additional pay for state workers who are called to active military duty. The measure would make up the difference between a worker's state pay and their military salary.

CELL PHONES AND CABS DRIVERS (H 3758) - The Public Safety Committee held a hearing on legislation prohibiting the use of cellular phones by taxi drivers when a passenger is in the cab.

INITIATIVE PETITIONS (S 362) - A lengthy and heated hearing was held before the Election Laws Committee on a bill increasing the number of signatures required in order to place a proposed law or constitutional amendment on the ballot. Under current law, either proposal goes on the ballot if the number of signatures gathered equals at least three percent of the votes cast in the last gubernatorial election. The bill raises the requirement to 2.5 percent of all registered voters for a proposed law and three percent for a constitutional change. Secretary of State William Galvin said that under current law, 65,825 signatures would be required for either proposal and under the new law 110,000 would be necessary for a proposed law and 119,000 for a constitutional change.

SCHOOL BUS MONITORS (H 1340) - The Education Committee held a hearing on a bill requiring a monitor on all school buses.

TEACHERS AND LEGISLATORS (S 337) - Teachers and legislators would switch jobs for a day under the terms of a proposal heard by the Education Committee. The measure provides for a social studies teacher from each senator's and representative's district to participate in a conference on state government while the legislator serves as a substitute teacher in that teacher's class.

Nothing is set in stone for the village project

what will happen. Either way, selectmen will take up the project again at their next meeting, April 29.

So far, merchants have raised $200,000 to help pay for burying or repositioning utility wires. Waterfield, however, has said that burying the wires would cost as much as $900,000 and burying conduits for wires to be put underground in the future would cost $550,000.

It is unclear how the sidewalk and street improvements would be effected if utility wires were made a priority. Some merchants and residents suggested that additional savings could come from changing the sidewalks from concrete to asphalt. Representatives from Waterfield said that change could save anywhere between $60,000 and $200,000.

After the meeting, Selectman Tom Callahan, who had previously expressed concerns that the village project was being "hijacked" by merchants, said the selectmen had allowed the project to be taken over by "naysayers." "We're letting a handful of people kill what the rest of the town wants to do," he said.

Callahan said residents already had two chances to pay for burying the wires, once a few years ago by way of a hike in their utilities bill, and once earlier this year by way of an override, both of which were turned down. But Selectman Michael Sullivan said that residents would probably want the wires removed if they did not have to pay for it, although he was unsure if residents would want to limit other sidewalk improvements just to accommodate for the wires.

Selectman Merle Brown said improving pedestrian access and safety was what was driving the project, not burying utilities. "The main thrust of what I've heard is that (the people) would rather have safety first than put the wires underground," he said.

Sullivan said feedback from residents would be needed to help decide whether selectmen should pursue burying the wires at the cost of perhaps losing other parts of the project.

"I don't think we need a referendum. I just think we need to get a sense from people in the town," he said.

Village design was almost finalized

Some issues remain undecided

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Before deciding to reconsider the entire scope of the village revitalization project, selectmen and merchants spent the better part of two hours negotiating smaller issues like bumpouts, parking spaces and sidewalks.

Some issues were resolved, others were not.

• The decision to move the POW/MIA memorial from an island in the middle of Depot Street was not resolved. Designers suggest moving it to the southern corner of Depot and South Main Street. Selectman Callahan liked the idea because it would allow people to read the memorial. Selectman Sullivan opposed it because he thought the median strip prevented people from cutting corners when they turned.

• Decisions on "bumpouts," or sidewalk extensions that are considered pedestrian friendly because they provide improved views at crosswalks, were mixed. A bumpout from in front of Tedeschi's was approved, as was a bumpout at the corner of Depot and South Main. A bumpout at the corner of South Main and Brook Street was not decided upon, although Police Chief Robert Jackson opposed it because it would prevent u-turns. Others supported it for that same reason. A bumpout at the corner of South Main and Elm Street near the hardware store was approved, but it was agreed that the planters, cobblestones, and water pump that currently inhabit that corner would be kept in tact. A bumpout on the opposite corner was reduced in size and approved.

• Plans for a sidewalk on the south side of Elm Street were taken out. Selectmen agreed to pave that side of the road and allow for a loading zone for a tractor trailer.

• Selectmen voted to increase all angled parked spaces to 9 feet in width, up from 8.5 feet. The decision will result in a loss of two parking spots.

• Ralph Dormitzer called for asphalt sidewalks, saying that cement was not in the character of the town. "It's ruined Scituate. It's ruined Maynard. It's ruined a bunch of towns. Don't do something that's not consistent with the town," he said. Some merchants agreed asphalt was better, but no decision was made by selectmen.

• Since Gerd Ordelheide is obligated to pay the $22,000 cost of the sidewalk in front of the Red Lion Inn, it was agreed with that money will go towards extending the sidewalk on the east side of South Main Street up to the old Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Also contributing to the cost of that extension will be the savings from the omitted sidewalk on Elm Street and the omitted new planters and cementing at the corner of South Main and Elm near the hardware store.

Ben Franklin was right: Leaves of three, let it be

COMMON GROUND

Amy Whorf McGuiggan

Like 85 percent of adults, I'm allergic to poison ivy, but though I traipse through it every summer on the beach in Provincetown, I've managed, for the last 10 years or so, to avoid "catching" it. It may be that I'm outgrowing it, as oftens happens with age (though one can also lose immunity), but I'm still not taking any chances. After my walks, I head down to the water's edge and exfoliate my skin with handfuls of wet sand and rinse with salt water.

I can even find a few good things to say about poison ivy. Its autumn display of color is one of the most stunning sights in the fall woods. Its tangle of vines and roots helps with erosion control, particularly on the Cape where there is little vegetation to bind the wandering sands. Animals, which do not suffer the same ill effects as we humans do, seek shelter in the poison ivy jungle, a natural fortress that deters human interlopers. Still, I'm not about to get cavalier with this widespread and insidious plant. I've seen, first hand, how toxic it can be.

Last fall, my son, who had been sitting in the path of smoke from a small campfire in the woods behind his school, came down with a case of poison ivy that sent him to the hospital. Poison ivy vines or twigs had, unwittingly, been included in the kindling pile. Swollen and unrecognizable, he spent five hours in the emergency room hooked up to an IV and a week on a corticosteroid. The rash lingered for another two weeks.

Poison ivy (Toxicodendron radicans or Rhus radicans), native to North America, is a hardy member of the sumac family which numbers some 600 different species that thrive in warm and temperate conditions worldwide. Among the more common species that are rash-producing are poison sumac and poison oak.

Poison sumac grows as a tree or shrub in swampy areas and is often confused with Staghorn sumac, a common, non-toxic plant that grows in old fields, along roadsides and woodland edges and is characterized by its clusters of hairy red berries. Poison oak, which closely resembles poison ivy, is a west coast plant and not one that we on the east coast have to concern ourselves with. We have our hands full with the ubiquitous cousin that chokes our woodlands, scrambles along our beaches and makes many a backyard garden a hazard area.

Highly variable in form, poison ivy grows as a climbing vine, an erect shrub or a ground cover. Sprouting from existing roots, underground roots called rhizomes, from vines and from seed, poison ivy sends out its familiar compound leaves consisting of three leaflets - two lateral and one central - in the spring. Like the plant itself, the leaves are variable, shiny or dull, smooth or toothed, measuring anywhere from one-half inch to four inches in length. On beaches, poison ivy leaves have adapted to the salty, harsh environment by curling slightly and taking on a waxy appearance.

Emerging red-tinged in the spring, the leaves stay green throughout the summer. By June, small yellowish-white flowers are borne in slender clusters near the main stem, followed by clusters of small greenish-white berries, called drupes, an important food source for wildlife. In the fall, after its brilliant color display, the leaves drop. Old stems and vines, covered with fibrous roots that make them look hairy, continue to cling tenaciously to the ground and to trees.

Unlike Jimson Weed, yew, Water Hemlock or any number of mushrooms, poison ivy is not classified as a poisonous plant but, rather, a plant (like celandine, tansy or stinging nettle) that can produce an allergic reaction (rhus dermatitis) in humans, the most common allergy in the country. The culprit is a potent, pale yellow toxic "sap" called urushiol (pronounced you-ROO-shee-ol) that sticks to most everything and stays active for years. Deriving from the Japanese word, urushi, meaning lacquer, urushiol turns black and dries hard when exposed to air. Urushiol is present inside all parts of the poison ivy plant - buds, leaves (including dead leaves), vines, stems and hairy roots (including dead vines, stems and roots) - but is only released when the plant suffers bruising or breakage. Given the plant's fragility, merely brushing up against it will release the oil. Flecks of dried urushoil can usually be seen on plants.

Whether by direct exposure, indirect exposure such as from petting an animal, or through airborne exposure, urushoil is quickly absorbed by the skin and begins to metabolize and form new structures that the body responds to as invaders. To combat the invaders, the body mounts an immune response that causes the characteristic itching, inflammation and blistering.

Contrary to popular belief, the poison ivy rash occurs only where the skin has come into contact with urushoil and is "spread" only if the urushoil is spread. Once the oil is absorbed by the skin, the rash itself, no matter how much one itches it, will not be spread to other parts of the body or to other people.

These days, the pharmacy shelves and Internet chat rooms are filled with poison ivy "remedies" which include everything from barrier and topical creams to hot water, white vinegar, paint thinner, saltwater and bleach treatments. Native Americans are said to have eaten the plant's young leaves in an increasing dose to acquire immunity, and because goats seem to enjoy eating poison ivy, drinking their milk has long been believed another way to acquire immunity. Needless to say, consuming any part of the poison ivy plant is not, these days, recommended and could prove fatal.

One folk remedy that has proved to be effective - and apparently safe - is the application of juice from the Spotted jewelweed (Impatiens capensis), a delicate and succulent member of the Touch-me-not family. Also known as Spotted touch-me-not, Horn-of-plenty or snapweed, jewelweed is a tall annual wildflower that grows in dense stands in shady marshes and moist woods. The profuse golden orange, speckled cornucopia-like flowers dangle from translucent stems. The flower's nectar, with a more than 40 percent sugar content, is a favorite of hummingbirds, bees and butterflies. An interesting part of the plant is As slipper-like seed pod that bursts, when ripe, upon being touched, dispersing seeds far and wide. Equally fascinating are its waterproof leaves that appear silver when covered with dew or rain or immersed in water.

Often found growing alongside poison ivy, jewelweed is used as a treatment for both poison ivy and insect bites. A handful of the juice from crushed stems or leaves seems to minimize rash and inflammation. There is also anecdotal evidence of jewelweed's effectiveness in treating fungal conditions such as athlete's foot. Be aware, however, that everyone reach differently to remedies and that caution should always be exercised when using any plant from the wild.

In the end, the best treatment for poison ivy is prevention and by taking a few precautions, we can all enjoy the great outdoors without the agony of the itch two or three days later.

What you can do:

Learn to identify poison ivy in all its forms and in all seasons.

If possible, avoid uncleared paths or stay in the middle of paths.

Cover arms and legs, use a barrier cream and carry a cleanser and a field guide if you plan to walk where poison ivy may be growing.

Wash all clothing, garden tools and gloves, and pets after contact.

If in contact with poison ivy, look for jewelweed and wash skin with its juice or wash skin with liberal amounts of soap and water.

Avoid dead poison ivy plants, even brittle leaves. All parts retain toxicity year-round.

Avoid cutting and collecting any woodland vines for holiday wreaths. Once poison ivy drops its leaves it can be difficult to distinguish it from other non-toxic vines.

If you must pull poison ivy from a garden environment, cover yourself, wear gloves and soak the roots of the plant thoroughly. Pull the plant out slowly and dispose of it in plastic bags. Do not compost. Spray the area with an herbicide and mulch over to block sunlight from any remaining roots.

Never burn poison ivy. Avoid all woodland fires. Never, never eat poison ivy, leaves with the aim of acquiring immunity.

To learn more about poison ivy, visit www.poisonivy.aesir.com or www.poison ivy.org. A new and informative booklet, "Poison Ivy, Pets & People," by Scituate writers Randy Connolly and Heidi Ratner-Connolly is available through their website www.10thingstoknow.biz. The Trustees of Reservations will host a free Poison Ivy Family Hike on Saturday, June 7 from 10 a.m. to noon. Tara Nieves, the Trustees' Education and Interpretive Programs Coordinator, will lead the walk with Heidi Ratner-Connolly. Call 781-821-2977 to pre-register. Participants should meet at the Turkey Hill parking lot.

Vizsla owners celebrate spring on Sandy Beach

Sunday, April 13 Cohasset vizsla owners gathered on Sandy Beach to celebrate Tucker Nichols' first birthday. Tucker belongs to Malcolm and Heather Nichols and was joined by fellow vizsla party-goers Ruby, Eva, Catcher and Greta owned by Sarah Barringer, Jim and Laurie Hamilton, Mike and Lisa Elkins and Dave and Katie Dugan. The vizsla breed (pronounced vee-shla) was first recognized by the AKC in the 1950s after being imported from Hungary, and has rapidly gained in popularity in America since a vizsla won best of show at the Westminster Dog Show several years ago.

Vizslas are pointer-hunters, intelligent, active dogs, very affectionate and bring out an almost manic devotion from their owners who are known to boast endlessly about their various personality quirks. Vizslas have a keen sense of smell, able to find their masters' shoes in dark closets, well-developed jaws to chew the aforementioned shoes while possessing endearing qualities such as climbing up into pure strangers' laps and cuddling under the covers of their masters' beds. Their short, russet-colored coats are well suited for keeping clean and easily washed, particularly after a vigorous role in dead fish.

Vizslas are pointer-hunters, intelligent, active dogs, very affectionate and bring out an almost manic devotion from their owners who are known to boast endlessly about their various personality quirks.

The party broke up after much romping and digging, sea weed-nibbling and an occasional spectacular retrieve when Ruby beat a party-crashing Labrador to his own tennis ball. Party favors were exchanged including a chew stick for Tucker from Harrod's of London and chew ropes for all the invited guests.

10 fourth quarter goals propel laxmen past Barnstable, 19-7

It took the first seven quarters of the 2003 season to happen, but the Cohasset boys varsity lacrosse team finally began living up to its pre-season hype with an eight-minute, 10-goal explosion against Pilgrim Conference rival Barnstable on Tuesday, climaxing a 19-7 victory.

The Skippers, cited by two daily newspapers as a top contender for the state Div. 3 title, were crushed 19-7 by defending Div. 1 state champ Duxbury in the season opener on Thursday, and held a shaky 9-6 lead against their Cape Cod opponents going into the fourth quarter on Tuesday.

"We had a lot of trouble against an excellent Duxbury team," said head coach Kevin Orcutt, "and it seemed to carry over to the next game. We were tentative on faceoffs and ground balls, and had nine penalties by the start of the fourth period. We just seemed to lack commitment to the kind of blue-collar effort necessary."

The turnaround began with, surprisingly, a penalty called before the final quarter started on soph attackman Jake Previte for an illegal stick, resulting in a three-minute unreleasable infraction.

"We could have folded then," noted Orcutt, "but we used it in our favor."

Instead, senior midfielder John Durkin, a force all afternoon, powered through the defense for a short-handed goal and the Skippers killed off the rest of the time without retaliation.

"From that point on," said Orcutt, "our offense came alive."

Using an all-senior attack of Curt Kahn, Matt Davis and Tom Anderson, and getting ten consecutive face-off wins from senior Robert Hickey, the Skippers dominated, scoring

Perfect start for lady laxers

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Varsity players know that there are two different ways to please a coach with a win. The first way is taking care of business against weaker teams, dominating with solid play for a commendable win. The second way is meeting head on with a team more impressive on paper, and coming out with a hard-fought victory.

It's fair to say that coach Torin Sweeney was doubly pleased of his lady laxers this week.

"I'm very happy with the team right now," noted the long-time CHS coach, in his second year at the helm of the girls lacrosse team. "It gets us off on the right foot."

The girls opened the season at Cape Cod Academy, a team in just its first year of MIAA tournament eligibility. The Lady Skippers took down their Osterville adversaries, 8-2. The team got multiple goal games from senior Maura McKenney, junior Nicole Turgiss and sophomore Lauren Rizzotti, each of whom scored twice.

"[Cape Cod] played really well for a young team," assessed Sweeney, "but this was just our first game. We were kind of working the kinks out."

At home last Thursday evening, against a team Cohasset had seen much success against in past years, the Lady Skippers dominated another Cape foe, Barnstable, this time 13-5. Turgiss and Rizzotti again threw in two goals to pace the offense, while underclassmen McKenzie Holway and Lisa Spirito pitched in a pair apiece.

One step at a time

Cohasset softball team earns first win, continues to make strides

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

On Monday, the Cohasset High softball team won its first game in nine years. On Tuesday, the program took an even bigger step with a 14-0 loss to Abington…huh?

The 24-4 win over South Shore Christian on Monday was satisfying, but SSC is a team quite similar to Cohasset, new to varsity competition and not expected to really even compete with the big girls for at least a few more years.

Cohasset, which had no softball for seven years until play started last spring at the JV level, is not expected to come even close to competing with perennial softball powerhouses such as Abington— but that is precisely what happened 24 hours after the SSC game.

The Lady Skippers did not score and did not even have a hit against star Abington hurler Michelle Leines, but they held the unbeaten two-time defending South Shore League champs to just 14 runs, with most of these coming toward the end of the seven inning game.

"I was just so proud of these girls after this game," said CHS coach Deb Bostwick. "We played like a team today. The girls were positive, cheering each other on and battling to the end. This was an extremely positive day.

One down, more to go

CHS baseball team notches first win

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

One down, and many more wins to go in the Al Galotta era, hopefully.

Signs pointing toward a resurgence of Cohasset High baseball continued to show on Monday, as the Skippers downed Holbrook in a non-league tilt, 13-3.

A grand slam by senior centerfielder Chris McKenna broke the game open in the fifth inning, and provided senior pitcher Terry Baroudi (five innings, five hits, two strikeouts, one earned run) a lot more cushion than he would need to pick up the win.

Baroudi helped his own cause with two hits and 3 RBI.

Also coming up with big hits were Trey Curry (single, 2 RBI), Mike Snowdale (two hits, 2 RBI) and Matt O'Brien (two hits, two RBI).

"It felt good to get that first one under out belt," said Galotta, who coached baseball for 27 years and was Athletic Director at Archbishop Williams for 25 years before retiring last spring and joining the CHS staff first as a math teacher and then as a baseball coach. "If we keep improving, and the pitching stays solid, there should be more of those coming."

The winning streak ended at one when the Skippers fell to South Shore League rival Abington on Tuesday, 14-4, but the veteran coach felt the overall performance against the perennially strong Green Wave team was another step in the right direction for his program.

The visiting Skippers trailed by just two, 5-3 after four and a half innings. Unfortunately, junior starter John Downing seemed to tire in the fifth, and Abington hung a five-spot in that frame to knock him from the game.

Sophomore Ted Straughn belted a two-run home run in the top of the fifth to make it a 5-3

Shortage of refs further muddles makeup games slate

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

Just looking to fill some space here until the Sun God deigns us worthy to be smiled upon.

Uncooperative weather patterns have certainly wreaked havoc on the first three weeks of the spring sports seasons in these parts, creating Excedrin-sized headaches for Athletic Directors and Sports Editors in all of our coverage towns.

A cheery forecast for this week certainly helps matters, but it will take several days of sunshine to adequately dry several of our baseball and lacrosse fields. Still, at this point, coaches and ADs will do everything they can to squeeze a makeup game or two in while the sun is shining, with field conditions now rendered a distant secondary concern...that is, if they can get refs.

Indeed, the shortage of referees and game officials has suddenly swung to the forefront on the gripe list of our ADs. Several baseball, softball and lacrosse games in our area that were tentatively slated to be made up this week were postponed yet again because no one was avalable to oversee them.

The shortage is felt more in lacrosse than baseball or softball, as the ranks of qualified officials for that sport has not kept pace with the exponentially increasing number of schools that have added it to their athletic offerings.

No wonder they play lacrosse, much like football, under just about any conditions.

It's really too bad. Lacrosse is an extremely entertaining take when played under the proper conditions.

In case you hadn't heard it yet, there will be no reformation of the Patriot League next year for hockey, as has been previously speculated in this space.

The reformation is being eyed instead for the 2004-'05 season. So Scituate, Rockland, Hanover, Middleboro, Duxbury and Hingham will all play a second season as independents next winter.

The former five teams are reportedly interested in getting back into league play in 2004, and there have even been hints that Hingham, the school that pushed hard for independence two years ago, may be considering rejoining the PL fold.

If Hingham does not rejoin, there is talk of a possible partnership with the South Shore League, which is currently home to seven teams. The idea of creating "Large School" and "Small School" divisions has been bandied about, with Abington/East Bridgewater (which draws from a far larger talent pool than any of the other six schools in the SSL) seeming a likely candidate to move up into a league with the Patriot League teams.

The long moribund Cohasset High baseball program appears to have gotten a noteworthy shot in the arm from former longtime Archbishop Williams Athletic Director Al Galotta.

Cohasset High, by far the smallest school in the South Shore League in terms of student population, is home to approximately 150 male students in grades 9-12. Given the out-of-this-world popularity of lacrosse in the town and the success the boys track teams has enjoyed in recent years (consecutive unbeaten seasons and only two losses in the last four years combined), the baseball talent pool has been thinned considerably in recent years. Things hit rock bottom last year when the JV team carried the bare minimum number of players down the stretch.

Galotta spent 25 years as Archbishop Williams' Athletic Director and 27 years as a baseball coach at the school, helping to turn the Bishops into perennial contenders. Not long after he retired from both posts last spring, he took a job as a math teacher at Cohasset High, and it didn't take Athletic Director Ron Ford long to talk him into taking on another job.

The Skippers opened this season with 32 players in the program, up dramatically from last spring. Obviously, coach Galotta's reputation preceded him. And, if anything, it's only grown in stature since.

"Coach Galotta's practices are so well organized and well run," noted sophomore ballplayer Brendan Barrett. "It doesn't take long at all to see that he and coach (assistant Damien) D'Angelo really know what they're doing.

"I think people are excited about baseball again in Cohasset."

game. Sophomore Louis Blanco (2-for-4, RBI) and Snowdale (2-for-4) were the only Cohasset players with multiple hits.

The Skippers (now 1-3) were slated to host SSL rival Carver yesterday with staff ace Ted Straughn on the mound.

Unlike most of the teams at CHS, the Cohasset nine are also scheduled to play a few games during the school vacation week. They'll travel to South Shore VoTech on Tuesday and host Millis next Thursday. Both games are set to start at 10 a.m..

Baseball Notes

It was a rough opener for the Cohasset nine, last Thursday, as they fell to neighboring town rival Hull on the road, 4-3.

A strong complete game, 13-strikeout performance from sophomore Ted Straughn was rendered moot by one rough inning. The host Pirates reached Straughn for all four of their runs in the bottom of the fourth, as the hard throwing Cohasset righthander allowed six baserunners to reach in that frame (two hits, four walks). An error also proved costly, allowing two unearned runs to cross.

"You throw out that one bad inning, and Ted pitched a real gem," noted first year CHS coach Al Galotta.

Ted allowed only four more Hull batters to reach (surrendering two more hits and two more walks) in his other five innings of work combined.

The Cohasset bats actually did all of their damage in the top of the fourth inning to take a brief 3-0 lead.

A couple of walks and an error set the stage for a big two-run double by Cohasset senior Matt O'Brien. This would be the first and last hit on the afternoon for the Skippers, though. Hull senior Mike Foley was brought on in relief to strike out the next two batters, and he shut the Skippers down from there.

nine more goals, and disrupting Barnstable's clears on the few occasions that Cohasset lost the ball.

Davis led all scorers with a double hat trick (six goals) plus an assist, and now has 99 career points. Durkin had five goals, a career high. Kahn, last year's leading scorer, had two goals and five assists and, after two games, has 153 career points. Previte picked up his first varsity hat trick and had an assist, while Anderson scored two and helped on two for his first career four-point game. Hickey completed the scoring with a goal and an assist.

"Defensively, we're still a work in progress," said Orcutt. "Although Nick Murphy had 14 saves, I'm still looking for him to pick up his level of play. Evan Pestone and Nick Spirito were strong on ground balls, and Ben Lynner, Conor Buick and Mike Devine played well at times, but we need to assert ourselves better as a unit."

In their opening game last Thursday, the Skippers did little of anything well against Duxbury, a nationally-ranked team that made Cohasset its 27th-consecutive victim.

While Cohasset goalie Murphy kept his team in the game early with five point-blank saves, the Skippers trailed 5-0 at the end of one period and 9-2 at the half en route to â‡" coincidentally a 19-7 loss.

Curt Kahn led Cohasset with two goals and an assist, while Jake Previte also had a pair of scores. John Durkin, Matt Davis and Mike Rasmussen each had single tallies and assists, while defenseman Nick Spirito picked up an assist.

Cohasset was scheduled to play Scituate on Wednesday, April 15 in a make-up of what was originally set to be the season opener, and will not take the field again until Friday, April 25 when they face St. John's of Shrewsbury in the home opener at Alumni Field.

"We'll take a short vacation break after Scituate," said Orcutt, "and have three days of tough practices to get ready for St. John's, who we've never played before. We don't know too much about them other than that they're predicted to be competing for the Central Massachusetts championship and a berth in the Division 2 state playoffs. They asked to schedule us, so we know they'll be well-prepared and up for our game. We'll have to be ready and at our best."

One step at a time

"I've been saying all along that we'd be OK taking things one step at a time, and a lot of those will be baby steps, but today we took a big step."

Cohasset freshman pitcher Katie James kept the vaunted Green Wave batting order off balance with her off speed delivery, and surrendered just six runs through four innings of work on five hits and two walks.

Unfortunately, Katie jammed the thumb on her pitching hand in the bottom of the fourth, and had to be replaced on the mound by captain Heather Peraino, the lone senior on the team.

Heather, who like Katie is not a power pitcher, paid the price on the mound, as Abington hitters began timing the off-speed delivery and teeing off. Heather surrendered eight runs on 12 hits in the final three innings, but this barely put a dent in Bostwick's cheery postgame demeanor.

"We did so many little things well today," the coach continued. "Our defense was very good. We almost turned a double play, and we did a very good job on some basic things like hitting cutoffs. It was very positive."

In particular, the coach lauded the defensive work of catcher Casey Anderson, who nearly threw out one of two Abington base-stealers, freshman shortstop Melissa Crowley-Buck and centerfielder Cecila Chapman.

The other starters in the game were Andrea Keaton at first, Caitlin Gontarz at second, Danielle Pinkus (who normally starts at short) at third, Peraino in left, Molly Ogradnik in right and Caitlin Condon at DH.

In Monday's 24-4 win, the slaughter rule was invoked after five innings. Katie James struck out five, while surrendering no walks and just one hit in three innings, and Peraino struck out two while allowing just one hit in two innings of cleanup duty on the mound.

Peraino also paced the offense, going 5-for-6 at the plate with 5 RBI. Junior Rachel Doyle went 5-for-5 with 6 RBI.

"I think our girls felt a little sorry for South Shore Christian because we've been in the same situation a few times, but it was nice to get a win," said Bostwick. "Getting that first win under our belts is a big one no matter who it comes against."

The Lady Skippers were slated to travel to Carver yesterday to play their final game before school vacation week. Their next scheduled game is for Tuesday, April 29, with Harwich coming to town.

And so it begins

Season of high hopes for girls tennis team begins as expected

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The steamroller known as the Cohasset girls tennis team began their quest for an unprecedented eighth straight league title with two decisive wins over South Shore opponents. Toppling Duxbury and Abington with twin sweeps of 5-0, the girls now stand at 2-0, and are clearly one of the favorites not only for the league, but for the South Sectional post-season tournament.

The general consensus among players is that this is "the year." The team lost only one player to graduation, albeit multiple year all-star Kelly Stone, and the team now contains legitimate starters in all four high school grades. Senior captains Lindsay Grossman and Julie Shea lead the squad that took wins on Monday and Tuesday.

Sophomore Elizabeth Stone, now one of the top players in the state, took her two matches with ease, matching the shut-out theme of the team with 6-0, 6-0 scores. Stone dominated her role as a second singles player as a freshman, and the transition to first singles has been quite fluid for the underclassman.

On Monday, junior Holly Graham assumed second singles in place of Grossman, who was visiting a college. Graham beat Duxbury's number two 6-1, 6-1. That Graham will usually be playing third singles speaks to the incredible talent and depth on the squad. Graham has, over the past three years, proved herself able to play and win at first doubles, third single and second singles.

Freshman Emilie Shea stepped in at third singles, and won in the first varsity match of her career. The doubles teams also went undefeated, with senior Shea and junior Courtney Caron winning at first and juniors Emily Sullivan and Corey Evans taking second.

In the Tuesday match-up with Abington, the line-up switched greatly, but produced the same result. After Stone this time was Grossman, showing no signs of rust in her 6-0, 6-2, despite not playing for over a week due to the weather. Graham moved back to her spot at third singles seamlessly, tallying another 6-1, 6-1 decision.

Senior Molly Flanagan teamed with sophomore Rachel Garber at first doubles, digging out a close match to finish the sweep, while freshmen Chelsea Grossman and Kate Bolger dispatched their second doubles opponents by a score of 6-0, 6-1.

Cohasset second singles player Tim Anton returns it on the forehand in Tuesday's showdown for the boys team against South Shore League rival Abington.

Boys

The boys team began league play this week, but regrettably did not fare as well. The swinging Skippers could muster only one win against a newly charged Abington team on Tuesday, falling 4-1, as their season record dropped to 2-1.

Senior Ross Lieb-Lappen, who has apparently found his niche at third singles, was the only singles player to maintain his undefeated record. Lieb-Lappen won decisively over Green Wave junior Matt Rosse, 6-4, 6-2, dominating the match after falling behind 3-0 at the start.

Dave Ingber and junior Tim Anton fell at the one and two positions to senior Eric Goldman and Steven Perry, respectively. Showing vast improvements in their games from last season, Goldman and Perry, should they keep up their level of play, could be a 1-2 kick for Abington that is second only to that of seven-time defending league champs Norwell.

The doubles pair of Scott Faber and Andrew Wise could not build on the momentum started in their impressive win at Cape Cod Academy, losing in straight sets. However, the freshmen duo of Nils Sceery and Chris Pescatore split sets with their opponents, but the match had already been decided, and their contest was scored a tie.

A team in every sense

Cohasset tracksters do whatever it takes

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

This Cohasset High track team is probably not as talented as the ones Al LaFountain has been able to put out there over the last three or four years, and it is certainly no where near as deep. However, it is, notes their veteran coach, as "true" a team as he's ever been associated with.

"These kids I have are doing everything I've asked of them and more," said the fifth year CHS boys and girls track coach. "They all buy in totally to what being on a team is all about. It's not always the case to get a collection of kids like this.

"Every one out there, from the seniors to the freshmen, is stepping to the plate, and doing all they can to earn as many points for the team as possible."

LaFountain — whose boys teams lost just two meets in his first four years at the helm, and none the previous two seasons – entered this season with a mere 22 athletes for both of his teams, 13 boys and nine girls.

Faced with this manpower shortage, every absence and injury has thrown a huge crimp in his planning, and forced him to often ask athletes to perform in events they've never even competed in, and, in some cases, never even practiced. He has yet to receive a negative response.

He's had freshmen such as Lisa Musto double up to run the "grueling gamut," both the mile and 2-mile races. She also threw a shot put for the first time ever on Monday in a meet with Harwich. Unfortunately, the girls lost that meet to the visiting Rough Ryders, 75-61.

Lisa's big brother Drew, a junior and first year trackster, has been used in close to half of a meet's 16 events. He's not a natural in any event, but works extremely hard and LaFontain raves about his "leadership potential."

The recent loss of senior captain and three event standout Ian Kidder has left the Skippers reeling in several areas, not the least of which is the javelin throw, which Kidder won in each of the first three meets this season. On Monday, junior Eric Belz threw the jav for just the second time in competition ever and, astoundingly, took first place.

Others new heroes these days include sophomore Alex Schwanter and freshmen Mark Bouchard and Pete Bunstein.

"We've got a lot of young guys who are seeing their hard work begin to pay off," said LaFountain. "That's very gratifying for me, and I'm assuming for them too."

Musto and these three underclassmen all earned points for the team in Monday's 76-60 win over South Shore League rival Harwich, which improved the boys to 2-1 in league competition (2-2 overall).

The biggest point-getters, though, were old reliables senior captain Jared Krupczak— who won both the 100 and 200-meter races, qualifying for States in the latter event — and senior Braun Goodson, who won the shot put and discus throw.

For the girls, who fell to 1-2 with the loss (1-3 overall), junior captain Jenn Buckley continued her outstanding season, winning the javelin, mile and 2-mile, narrowly missing out on qualifying for the states in the latter race.

Mary Silvia won the 800, finishing just 3-100ths of a second off he qualifying time. LaFountain figures she'll reach the magic mark in the next race where she's pushed.

Track Notes

Both of the teams captured their first wins on the season last Thursday, sweeping South Shore League rival Hull in decisive fashion.

The girls team took down the Lady Pirates, 78-37, behind three first place finishes apiece from Buckley and Nicole Whitney.

Buckley, a junior captain, won the javelin as well as both the mile and 2-mile races.

Whitney, a sophomore, took firsts in the 400-meter race and both the long jump and triple jump.

The boys 75-56 win was paced by three double winners.

Senior captains Jared Krupczak (100, long jump) and Ian Kidder (triple jump, javelin) each came up big, as did junior Nick Parker (110 and 300 hurdles).

CHS hockey team feted

The Cohasset High varsity hockey team recently held its annual Break-up Banquet at Atlantica Restaurant in Cohasset. In addition to the successful 11-7-4 season record to capture the South Shore League Championship title for the second season in a row, the team had many other accomplishments to recognize and many reasons to celebrate.

Athletic Director Ron Ford proudly announced that for the second season in a row, the team received the South Shore League Conference Sportsmanship Award. This award is voted on by the coaches of the South Shore League to recognize outstanding sportsmanship by an entire team. First year varsity Coach John Blake accepted the award on behalf of the team, acknowledging that attaining this award was a goal that the team had set at the beginning of the season and that each and every member of the team conducted themselves in a manner deserving of this award. Mr. Ford also indicated that the "2002/2003 South Shore League Champions" banner will be displayed in the new Middle-High School gymnasium.

In further acknowledgment of the team's commitment to good sportsmanship, senior tri-captain Tom Anderson was awarded the "MIIAA Sportsmanship Award." Tom was one of just seven players in Eastern Massachusetts to receive this honor.

Seniors Tom Anderson, Matt Davis and John Durkin ,and juniors Mike Devine and Mike Rasmussen were also named to the South Shore League All-Stars Team. All-star certificates and shirts were presented to each of these deserving players.

In keeping with long standing tradition, the team's four graduating seniors— Mike Calorio, John Durkin, Matt Davis and Tom Anderson— each received the traditional engraved memento watches presented to graduating seniors by the Hockey Boosters.

Two awards had been presented to members of the hockey team for many years and this year was no exception, although Coach Blake indicated that the selection process was difficult.

The "Norman Delaney Student Athlete Award" was presented by Mr. Delaney's son and former CHS hockey player, Matt (CHS '75). Norman Delaney was the original founder of the Cohasset Hockey Boosters in the 1970's. While he was a staunch supporter of Cohasset Hockey as well as all youth and high school sports in Cohasset, Mr. Delaney also placed a strong emphasis on academics. This memorial award therefore recognizes the "student athlete" and is awarded to the senior hockey player with the highest GPA and class rank. Senior forward Matt Davis was recipient of this year's "Student Athlete Award." Mr. Delaney's wife Helen and granddaughter Katrina were also in attendance at the banquet for the presentation of this award.

This year's "Barney Robinson Unsung Hero" Award was presented to Sophomore forward Ted Straughn. Mr. Robinson played hockey for Cohasset in the late 60s. He was not the star player on the team but was always known for his commitment to the team and for his hard work on the ice. After his untimely death in a construction accident, his former teammates wanted to recognize Mr. Robinson and his deep commitment to Cohasset Hockey and thus established this memorial award to honor him. This award is generally awarded to a current varsity player who has not received star recognition for the season but whose contributions — in terms of team spirit, commitment to the team and hard work on the ice— have been nonetheless significant. Among other contributions, such as Ted's emergence as a leader in the locker room this season, Coach Blake highlighted Ted's enthusiastic desire to keep playing despite several injuries that kept him off the ice for a few games this season.

A new award established this year was the Team MVP award. This silver cup mounted on a wood base was awarded to Senior John Durkin for his consistent, dependable and skilled level of play this season and for his contributions to the team's accomplishments. A plaque with John's name and the names of all future recipients will be on display at the High School.

Tri-captains Anderson, Davis and Durkin presented Coach John Blake and Assistant Coach Brendan Sweeney with tokens of appreciation from the team. The captains emphatically agreed that rookie Coach Blake's coaching skills and leadership skills brought them to a level of play that was unexpected by most hockey fans. Coach Blake's high level expectations and ambitious schedule challenged the team, and his coaching helped them rise to meet the challenge. In addition, on behalf of the team, John Durkin presented his mother, Shelanne, with an engraved crystal bowl in appreciation of her three years of outstanding Hockey Booster service to the CHS Hockey Program.

Each of the 22 members of the Varsity team as well as the coaching staff and the CHS Athletic Department received plaques boasting a team picture and the team's record for the season.

Under the leadership of Coaches Blake and Sweeney and next year's tri-captains, Mike Devine, Mike Rasmussen and Ted Straughn, the team can hardly wait for next season.

juniors Ashley Faber and Christen Reardon anchored the defense that led to a 12-1 lead in the second half. Sweeney attributes the let down at the game's end, a 4-1 surge by Barnstable, merely to not having practiced for over a week beforehand.

The team jumped to 3-0 by topping what was clearly their biggest test of the season, New Bedford, by a 9-6 score. New Bedford, an enormous school that remains in the small school conference because the realignments have not been completed, beat Cohasset handily last year, 12-5, on the strength of All-Conference scorer Jen Roderiguez.

Roderiguez, possibly the most fearsome scorer in the state, has averaged an incredible seven goals per game over the past two years. Sweeney decided to put Rizzotti in blanket coverage on Roderiguez, who limited the all-star to four goals, her lowest output since 2001.

With Rizzotti focusing mainly on her defensive duties, McKenney picked up the offensive slack with five goals, while Turgiss threw in three. Coyne, who had another great game on defense, tossed in a goal late in the game to help seal the victory.

Holding a fast and dangerous attack team like New Bedford to six goals is an incredible accomplishment. Senior goalie Gia Petrakis recorded 12 saves in the win, in what Sweeney dubbed "the best game she has played in the two years I have been coach."

Unfortunately, the luck ran out for the local girls on Tuesday, as Norwell prevailed in a battle of the unbeatens with an 11-5 victory. Erica Turgiss scored three times for the host Lady Skippers in defeat.

Coaches go batty in wood vs. aluminum debate

Massachusetts became the first state in the country to ban aluminum baseball bats at the high school level, implementing the ban for the 2003 state tournament, where teams will use wooden bats only.

The vote passed to use wood in the tournament last October because of player safety. That is old news. Actually playing high school games with the new rules is today's news.

Prior to the season, each respective league voted whether or not it would use wood for the regular season. The Patriot League decided to use metal, the Atlantic Coast League and the South Shore League both opted for wood.

When teams from different leagues, with different bat rules, play each other, wood bats will be used because certain schools ultimately chose that safety is a factor to them. Thus, there would be a liability using a metal bat.

According to a recent study by a group of Brown University bioengineers, metal baseball bats can significantly outperform wooden bats. The fastest bat was not surprisingly a metal one with the average speed of a hit being 93.3 miles per hour, and off the slowest bat, a wooden one, the speed was 86.1 mph.

Another notable statistic showed that only 2 percent of hits made with wooden bats exceeded 100 mph. Conversely, off of the fastest metal bat, 37 percent of the hits exceeded 100 mph.

These statistics were the first of their kind gathered, and were published in November2002 by the Brown University News Service. The numbers from this unique experiment may have been helpful, but the findings may be more controversial than expected, because new Ball Exit Speed Ratio standards were put out for metal bats in 2003.

The new BESR bats were made to perform like Northern White Ash wood bats, and the weight length differential on the bats can be no greater than three. It has yet to be proven that these BESR bats will be safer.

All this means is that science has yet to give a definitive answer to safety.

The MIAA's decision to use wood prompts more than just the major questions, such as: are the players safer using wood, and is their even a legitimate safety concern in the first place?

Other questions sprout up like: is it fair for teams that use metal bats during the regular season to have to face teams in the tournament that used wood all year? With ever tightening budget constraints for athletic departments, is the use, and high cost of wooden bats necessary? Will college recruiters shy away from Massachusetts players because of stat inconsistencies?

In an attempt to answer these questions, we went to a few top baseball minds, who all happen to be head coaches from three different leagues on the South Shore.

"Wooden bats are going to change the game," noted Hanover High athletic director and head baseball coach Fran Coyle. "All the little things in the game are going to be brought back. There will be a greater influence on pitching and bunting."

"We played with wood years ago and there is no problem with going back," acknowledged Cohasset head coach Al Galotta. "There is more strategy. It's a National League philosophy."

The game was meant to be played with wooden bats, the professionals use them, a generation of baseball heroes past and present used them and "crack" has always sounded better than "ping." But is Massachusetts justified in taking safety initiatives over the rest of the high schools and colleges in the country that are not even proven to be effective?

"The MIAA should be applauded for making the tourney wooden," acknowledged Silver Lake head coach Steve Giambanco. "Players and coaches will like it better once everyone starts to use wood.

"The MIAA should have taken the initiative over college because colleges are on bat contracts, and I'm sure if you polled all the college coaches in the USA they would prefer to play with wood," added Giambanco. "Number one, it is safer. I have pitched hours of batting practice and there is no comparison: the safety is a huge benefit.

"Number two, it's a better game; less scoring and more of a premium on running and pitching."

High Schools and colleges started using metal bats in the 1970's because of the high costs of replacing broken wooden bats. The money factor still hasn't changed.

"Economically, it's crazy," said Coyle. "We have already broken 6-7 bats and they are $50 a pop. With budgets as tight as they are, it forces towns to get bats over hiring assistant coaches in some cases."

Turning on an inside fastball with a wooden bat is difficult. More and more pitchers will start throwing inside, and once again proponents of the wooden bat can look at the "better game" theory. Opponents of wood will see more broken bats with jamming the hitter, and possibly more injuries.

"Safety is a concern with the metal bats but more kids are going to get hit by pitches this year," said Coyle.

"I'm not a big believer that it is a safety problem," said Galotta. "It was very unfortunate that the two kids from B.C. High and Wellesley got seriously injured off batted balls last year, and those incidents really brought a lot of attention to the issue."

For college recruiters, Massachusetts will be the land of low ERAs and low batting averages, and many question how recruiters will view the skewed numbers. That answer in my mind is a simple not all that differently, unless you have a simple recruiter. Five-tool high school players will not be hidden behind the shadow of a Louisville Slugger.

Although I have confidence in the recruiting process, I did talk to a few coaches off record who thought that using wooden bats would have an affect on a players chances of being scouted and touted.

Wood versus metal might not even be the gripe for many, but rather wood or metal.

"A bigger issue rather than wood versus metal is the state being inconsistent," said Galotta. "Everybody in the state must do the same thing; wood or aluminum doesn't matter, but it should be the same."

"The wood bat mandate should have been all year if they were going to do it, not just the tournament," added Coyle.

The questions are tough, the answers are unclear, but the games go on, wood or without.

Norwell boys tennis team continues. The Clippers and coach Jay Swartz carry an unbeaten streak of seven years into South Shore League competition this spring. It truly is amazing that this school, the third smallest in the SSL in terms of student population, finds players to reload with year after year. Of course, coach Swartz no doubt has more than a little to do with this run of unprecedented success.

Following the team as a whole will be compelling enough this season, but watching the final hurrah of fourth year top singles player Sam Bitetti could be something truly special.

Coach Swartz has lined up matches with the only two players Sam has lost to in the last three seasons: Hingham's Brian Marsden and Wellesley's Tom Dohlnan. These three senior standouts, who have dominated virtually all other comers the last four years, have waged some memorable head-to-head battles the last few springs.

Sam fell to both of them in his sophomore year, but avenged those losses as a junior. He split with the pair last year, with Marsden regaining the edge in the mano-a-mano duel.

The showdowns with Marsden and Dohlnan were originally scheduled for the first week of the season, but both were postponed.

Hey, look at that: The Ledger has finally started running its All-Scholastic Winter teams, three weeks into the spring sports season and a week after we here at the Mariner wrapped up our teams, running one team per week over the last five.

American Legion Baseball signup

The Post 118 American Legion Baseball team will hold a sign-up on Saturday, April 19 at 9 a.m. at Scituate High School baseball field. Any teenage player from Scituate or Cohasset is eligible to play for the team.

Post 118 Team Manager Scott Arnold is still looking for an assistant coach for the team. Anyone interested in the position should call Scott at 781-545-1896.

Baseball clinic

Cohasset Recreation Department's South Shore Baseball Camp will provide an April vacation baseball clinic beginning Tuesday, April 22, through Friday, April 25, at Milliken Field.

The clinic runs from noon to 2:30 p.m. and this week-long program will cost $100 per participant.

For more information, call the Recreation office at 781-383-4109. Registration forms can be found at the Recreation office, first floor, Town Hall.

Over-55 softball league opens play April 27

It's "Batter Up" for the opening of the fourth season of the South Shore Senior Softball League on Sunday, April 27 at 10 a.m. at Central Park Field in Scituate.

Jim Hyde, founder and manager of the Senior Softball League is optimistic that the sun will shine, the field will be dry and many regular participants will show up ready to play. This very popular league, sponsored by the Scituate Council on Aging, is open to all those 55 and over.

Jim plans to field four teams and use two Scituate field each Sunday (including Central and the baseball diamond at the rear of the Gates Intermediate School) and one field on Wednesday to ensure all players take the field. Jim asks that all interested players meet at the Central Park playing field (on Branch Street, in front of Central Park Housing) on the 27th. There will be an obligatory registration including rules review, release signing and payment of a $30 fee. Teams will then be divided and play will start at the Gates as well as at the new Central Park Field. Come prepared and ready to play!

For further information, please call the Scituate Council on Aging at 781-545-8722 or Jim Hyde at 781-545-4681.

CHS sports scheduling updates

With all of the postponements of CHS sporting events forced by inclement weather the last two weeks, Athletic Director Ron Ford is urging parents and fans to check his daily voicemail postings (@781-383-6103) for schedule changes before heading out to an event.

CHS Athletic Fundraising

This winter's ticket raffle by the CHS Athletic Boosters raised over $1,800, according to Ron Ford, with all proceeds going to the CHS Athletic budget. The AD wished to express his thanks to Bob and Allison Silvia for all of the work they did on the drive, as well as to Phil Mahoney and Robert Donahue for donating tickets.

This spring, the boosters are kicking off a sale of official CHS blankets ($50 apiece), flags ($45) and beach towels ($20), all with the official Cohasset High banner.

Anyone interested in making a purchase should contact Ron Ford at 781-383-6103 or send a check made out to "Cohasset High School" to Cohasset High School, C/O Ron Ford, AD; 143 Pond St; Cohasset' MA, 02025.

Revolutionary soldiers to be honored

The Col. Thomas-Old Colony Chapter DAR members held a program on Revolutionary War Period Clothing at the home of Barbara Dillon, Regent. The members are preparing to participate in the 2003 Memorial Day Parade to commemorate the memory of 56 brave men from Cohasset who fought in the Revolutionary War and are listed on the muster roll of August 1, 1775.

According to Bigelow's Narrative History of the Town of Cohasset, "This first company of Cohasset soldiers were quartered probably in Roxbury at the fort upon the hill, making the extreme right of the American lines. They were part of that motley crew of 16,000 patriots bent on pushing the British army of 10,000 drilled troops out of Boston."

Rabbi finds local temple is the perfect fit

By Mary Jane Hanron
CORRESPONDENT

Spending a year contemplating how and where to begin the second half of a rewarding and worthwhile career led Shira Joseph to Congregation Sha'aray Shalom in Hingham. Rabbi Joseph, who has served the past nine years at Congregation Shir Ami, a family synagogue located in Newtown, Penn., a suburb of Philadelphia "was smitten immediately" with the groups, families and individuals with whom she communicated here on the South Shore.

"I was drawn by the application from them which was so very different," she explains. "It included quotes from congregants and what they yearned for. Their hopes, their prayers, their longing for spirituality and education were all expressed. This helped me to know a bit about them right away. Individuals are everything. That's how you form a community; one by one.

"I found this group to be the warmest, most compassionate, most soul seeking. That is why I decided this is where I want to continue journeying," she says.

Born in the Bronx, Joseph describes herself as having a definite "metropolitan orientation". She looks forward to residing in this historic and seaside town, but emphasizes that it was the bond she formed with the people of the synagogue that persuaded her to continue her career in Hingham.

The Rabbi Shira H. Joseph

Although her service will not begin officially until July,2003, Joseph is already tending to the needs of the new congregation. She is in touch by phone with members experiencing illness or difficulties and is aware of issues within the community. According to Fred Seigel, president of the congregation, she sent a message of comfort at the time of the recent Columbia space shuttle disaster, which he then forwarded to the members of Congregation Sha'aray Shalom.

"Her role has been amazing already," Siegel says. "We had a brunch for her over the holiday weekend of school vacation week and over 200 people attended! We were ecstatic! She is upbeat, energetic and spiritual and we know she will reinvigorate people and excite them about Judaism so that they will want to become more involved in their religious community."

Her interest in community being a passionate one, Joseph has begun to become acquainted with her colleagues in the clergy in Hingham and surrounding towns. Unity and cooperation among the religious leaders of the area is important in her view of community.

"We all came together at the time of 9/11," she noted. "I hope to participate in the broader community by teaching, sharing strength and making a connectedness. As clergy, we must elevate the goodness of people in our world. One by one…people must take a stand and choose blessings over curses and life over death. Problems begin when people stop seeing others as valued. If we all remember that every opinion is worthy, we would be much safer."

Special needs and services for disabled people is an area of great interest and expertise that Joseph hopes to share with the congregation and the community. She speaks about such topics as "Not leaving anyone behind" and the importance of accessibility to all buildings and religious structures in particular, so "that all may worship".

"We are all different, and yet we are all the same," she says. "The image of God has many faces, and yet there is a divine spark in each of us. Being much more tolerant of those who may be different is vital."

A fascinating yet surprisingly simple belief Joseph maintains is centered around food and dining. The room in which she welcomes guests is supplied with an inviting bowl of fresh fruit, a coffee pot and refreshing cool beverages. With humor she states," A favorite saying of mine is, 'If there is no flour, there is no study of the Torah!" She then explains, "You can not hate someone around your table. Food changes relationships."

Joseph and her husband, Saul have begun the task of relocating in the Hingham area. The move will not be completed until late spring or early summer. They have three daughters, the youngest of whom will be completing her senior year of high school in Pennsylvania prior to their move. Numerous pictures of the rabbi's family warmly graced the entrance hall of the synagogue. This inviting display included photo albums, wedding portraits and memories of family times all of which depicted the sense of family, spirituality and love of which the rabbi so warmly spoke.

"I found this group to be the warmest, most compassionate, most soul seeking. That is why I decided this is where I want to continue journeying."
— Rabbi Shira Joseph

The message she plans to bring to the community is one of faith and the importance of "places of worship being accessible to all in order that they may open their hearts to a spiritual life." She is also willing to participate in and present secular programs, and play an active role in public schools and education. This area is another in which she is comfortable as she was a teacher, reading specialist and holds a masters in education from Lehigh University, only one of her numerous credentials. She has lectured extensively and contributed to many publications, panels and organizations.

To the Jewish community of the South Shore, she brings an additional message.

"It is most important to make yourself known and be counted as a member of the Jewish community." She elaborates, "If I don't know your name, I can not be there. It is easier to have faith, to find strength and to heal when you know somebody. When people are not affiliated, the synagogue is diminished because all are not a part of our community of faith. Life cycles, like prayers, are meant to be shared. This synagogue is a family, and that is why I came."

WORSHIP NOTES

Holy Week at St. Stephen's

Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave., will celebrate the Great Vigil of Easter, a candlelight service on Saturday, April 19, at 7:30 p.m. The worship is dramatic, beginning with the church in darkness. Candles are lit and at the moment when resurrection is proclaimed the lights are turned on signifying that the resurrected Jesus is the light that no amount of darkness can overcome.

Worship Easter morning, Sunday, April 20, will be at 8 a.m. with quartet and brass and 10 a.m. with full choir and brass. The worship finds women, followers of Jesus, at the empty tomb enjoined to "Go and tell" Christ is risen. Both services, Eucharist with sermon, will be in the church.

Prior to Easter, there will be worship in the church on Maundy Thursday, April 17, at 7:30 p.m. This Eucharist commemorates the last supper and the importance of community for the church's life together in Christ. Following the Eucharist will be a simple meal of foods typical of Jesus' place and time - breads, cheese, olives, nuts, fruits and milk and honey.

A 24 Prayer Watch will begin on Maundy Thursday at 3 p.m. Parishioners sign up for an hour throughout the day to be in church to read, pray, just to be quiet, or meditate. It recalls Jesus' words at Gethsemane, "So, could you not watch with me one hour?" and the words of Psalm 130: "my soul waits for the LORD more than those who watch for the morning, more than those who watch for the morning." It is a powerful experience of prayer each minute throughout the day bringing the church into Good Friday.

Good Friday worship begins at noon on April 18, with an hour of quiet. The Prayer Book liturgy begins at 1 p.m. A service for children takes place at 2:30 p.m. and ends the traditional three hours of worship while Jesus was on the cross, A number of parishioners will participate in the 20 mile Good Friday walk raising money to assist economically poor areas of the south, particularly in rural Mississippi.

IT'S HAPPENING

'Sound of Music' on stage in May

The Cohasset Dramatic Club presents "The Sound Of Music" at the Cohasset Town Hall. Show dates are: May 2, 3, 9, 10, 16 & 17 at 7:30 p.m. and May 4, 11, & 18 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $12 and are available at Buttonwood Books and Spring Brook Kids in Cohasset, Front Street Book Store in Scituate, at the door or by phone at 781-544-0304. Girl Scout Troops receive a $2 discount on advanced purchase tickets. Contact Barbara Baumgarten for details at 781-383-1834. Sunday May 4 is "Seniors Day". All seniors receive a $2 discount. Call 781-544-0304 to reserve tickets.

President's Tea

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its yearly President's Tea at the Second Congregational Church Bates Hall Tuesday, April 22. The guests are the garden club presidents from the South Shore District. The tea will begin at noon, followed by a presentation given by landscape designer Judith Reeve, who will demonstrate techniques to help us garden comfortably and safely, no matter what our age or ability.

Arbor Day walk

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will host an Arbor Day celebration on Saturday, April 26 at 10 a.m.. President Sally Avery and Conservation Chairman Meg Moore will lead a walk through the new Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary identifying trees and plant communities. All those interested in joining Avery and Moore should meet at the Wheelwright Park, North Main Street entrance parking lot at 10 a.m..

Kick aerobics

The Cohasset Recreation Department announces ongoing registration for adult fitness classes based upon six-week sessions. This 70-minute class will provide participants with a total body workout through high-energy instruction in step aerobics, kickboxing, and muscle conditioning.

The class will meet Tuesday and Thursday mornings in the auditorium at Town Hall from 9-10:15 a.m. The cost of the 12-class session is $100 per participant. Step equipment will be provided for up to 20 participants; however, two-to-five-pound hand-weights should be brought to class for the muscle conditioning segment of the training.

Call the recreation department at 781-383-4109 to register.

Cardio-kick boxing

Never-tried kick boxing? Don't even know what it is? The Cohasset Recreation Department announces a free introduction to cardio kick boxing. Master martial arts and certified aerobic trainer Charles Palmer will conduct the class. This introductory class will meet Monday, April 29, in the Town Hall Auditorium at 10 a.m. No pre-registration is necessary.

Dog Obedience

The Cohasset Recreation Department will continuously, throughout the summer, offer dog obedience classes taught by Happy Dog Training School.

Second session classes will be held on Monday evenings on the Town Common, Cohasset, starting Monday, April 28, for Obedience with Distractions at 7 p.m. and at 6 p.m. for beginners. For all classes the fee is $100 for the five-week, one hour per week program. Dog owners are required to have their dogs' shots/inoculations up to date.

To register for the next available session, call the Recreation office at 781-383-4109. A new session will begin approximately every five weeks. Classes are limited in size and participants will be accepted on a first call, first enrolled basis.

Brancale art is on exhibit

Joan Brancale, a gallery artist with South Shore Art Center, has an exhibit of her most recent oil paintings at Cohasset's new Paul Pratt Memorial Library now located in the former Osgood Elementary School at 35 Ripley Road. The show, "Winterbreak," features local South Shore landscapes. This is the inaugural exhibit at the new library and the show will remain until April 26.

Many of the paintings for "Winterbreak" are local Hingham and Cohasset scenes, developed in the artist's studio this past January and February, working from plein-air studies, thumbnail sketches and her own photographs. For a landscape painter, this "winter break" of working inside provided an opportunity to focus more on memory and emotional intent. A moment outside caught in a sketch or photograph is extended and altered in the process of painting.

Brancale's art career began as a professional set designer and muralist. Having received her MFA in Design from Tisch School of the Arts at New York University she designed and painted scenery in New York City before moving to the Boston area. Over the years she has continued to work in theatre as well as creating murals for residential and commercial interiors. Her profession developed skills that have proved useful as a fine artist.

Painting on location throughout the South Shore and Cape Cod offers Brancale the opportunity to savor nature's gifts. Stories are often waiting to unfold in her work, the mood of the moment highlighted by sensitive use of color and detail.

Golf outing benefit for nursery school

The South Shore Community Center will host a golf outing at Black Rock Country Club in Hingham on Monday, June 23. Proceeds of the outing will go to the nursery school. Parents, members and friends of the Community Center are invited to play golf or join the fun after for a barbecue at Black Rock. The nursery school is seeking corporate sponsorships. For information and more details please call or email Deborah Donahue 781-383-2093 or Deirdre Prescott at 781-383-6578.

Lincoln Family Home on '03 Kitchen Tour

On May 2, the South Shore Community Center will once again sponsor a tour of five unique Cohasset kitchens from 10:30 a.m.– 3 p.m.. Now in its seventh year, the Center's popular springtime tradition will again offer tourgoers both an inside view of some of the town's most innovative kitchens as well as a little something extra with the addition of samplings from local caterers at each home. This year's homes range from a recently renovated home that was once part of the estate of Royal Barry Wills to an antique colonial built in 1711 by Abraham Lincoln's ancestor's, the Bates family.

Purchased two years ago by Mark and Elizabeth Kissick, the historic North Main Street home was once two adjoining farmhouses. The property across the street, where the baseball field and swim center are now located, was an egg farm. Over the years the adjoining farmhouses became a connected two-family home, and in the early 1900's the two structures were converted to a single-family home. Amazingly, the Kissicks are the first family in nearly 300 years to occupy the home that have not been related to the Bates family.

Tickets for the tour are $25 and may be purchased at the Center or by calling 781-383-0088.

Aside from converting an existing horse barn to become a home for Elizabeth's burgeoning jewelry business, the new owners have taken great pains to maintain the historic integrity of the house. When updating the kitchen last year they considered increasing its size by incorporating some of the dining room, but decided against it, not wanting to deviate too far from the original design of the home. Instead, new appliances, cabinetry and countertops were added, but all in what Elizabeth calls a traditional Old World style. The kitchen is still its original size, complete with its original low ceilings, common in homes built during the period. As you tour rest of the home you can appreciate the period detail and the centuries that the home has seen.

Tickets for the tour are $25 and may be purchased at the Center or by calling 781-383-0088. Tickets are limited and early purchase is recommended. Funds from the 2003 Kitchen Tour will be used to support the programs of the South Shore Community Center. The Center, located at 3 North Main Street, is a non-profit organization dedicated to a wide range of educational and enrichment programs for infants to seniors.

Landscapes through the lens

Braintree photographer captures local color in basic black and white and digital format

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

In its on-going series of one-person gallery shows, The North River Arts Society has put the spotlight on a variety of local artists including painters and sculptors. It has not left out photography. Braintree photographer Bob Correia is now showing his works at the Ventress Library Gallery in Marshfield through May 24.

Correia, 41, has been shooting photos since his early teens, but has only done so professionally in the last five years or so. His previous public exhibitions consist of various group shows with the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset and the Quincy and Duxbury Arts Societies along with last year's Festival of the Arts and Members Show with NRAS.

In his first one-man show, Correia explores a diverse array of mainly his favorite photo subjects, dominated by scenic rural New England landscapes but also including the occasional off-beat angle shot of recreational life. Most of the former conveys the photographer's more conventional approach of straightforward color and black-and-white shooting, while much of the latter experiments with digital photography along with various techniques of toning, hand-coloring and frame design.

Braintree photographer Bob Correia at the opening of his one-man show on exhibit through May 24 at the Ventress Library Gallery.

Correia's landscape shots are taken at various locations around the South Shore, Western Massachusetts and New Hampshire. Many of them highlight lakes, rivers, marshes and other wetlands, such as the glacial ice-covering of "Bash Bish in Winter" or the tranquil scenes of "Brook Bounded by Rocks" and "Cranberry Pond," the latter undoubtedly shot in the cranberry-rich Plymouth region. An occasional landscape piece is enhanced by the presence of walking wildlife, such as "Great Blue Heron, Teal Marsh," while the experimental "North Scituate Shore Abstract" applies toning and hand-coloring to almost lunar landscape effect.

"Seal Rocks Sunset"

Other intriguing shots include the twilight riverbank angle of Bourne Bridge in "Darkness Falls Along the Canal," the memory provoking old Abington drive-in theatre site in "Fading Remains," the sepia-toned black-and-white New Hampshire farmhouses in "Barns in Winter" and the straight black-and-white shot of the long, wooden bridge in "Powder Point, Duxbury."

Sports is a theme to which Correia is drawn, as the photographer, a longtime Boston Bruins fan, displays in the bittersweet interior shot of "Boston Garden Demolition," and the on-field, minor-league baseball action of "Arriving Home Safely" and "Pitch Progression," the latter produced from four different angles of a mound ace's windup with help from Adobe Photoshop. The piece is composed of four separate photo shots, Correia said, not from holding down the camera shutter.

Elsewhere, the photographer offers a subtle sense of humor with the extra-terrestrial balloon figures in "Little-

The Righteous Brothers

Dream teams

By Josh B. Wardrop
STAFF WRITER

Gary Gilbert, the owner of Gilbert's Sports Nostalgia in Needham, clicks away at his computer, contemplating the eternal dilemma: Randy Johnson or Pedro Martinez?

"It's important to get a top pitcher in the early rounds," he muses, "but actually, I'll usually end up going with a shortstop first."

Gilbert isn't the new general manager of the Red Sox, he just pretends he is. He's one of millions of fantasy baseball fans, building fantasy teams for fantasy glory.

If your knowledge of baseball begins and ends with Abbott and Costello's "Who's On First?" routine, you're probably lost right now. But if you're clueless about fantasy baseball — a gaming trend that's rising faster than a Pedro heater — then you're definitely out of the loop, according to Erik Barmack.

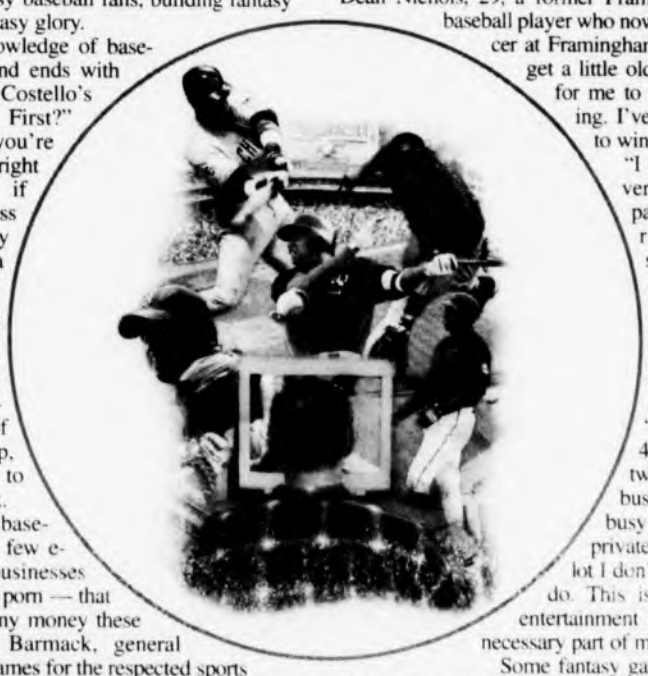
"Fantasy baseball is of the few e-commerce businesses — other than porn — that are making any money these days," says Barmack, general manager of games for the respected sports publication The Sporting News. "People are always surprised to learn that fantasy gaming is a multimillion-dollar industry."

According to research cited by Barmack, an estimated 10 percent of American men are paying for some sort of fantasy sports game, via Internet sites like CBS Sportsline or Yahoo!, or games advertised in sporting publications by companies like Millennium Fantasy Sports and Triple Play Fantasy Sports. That translates into 20 million to 30 million Americans spending hard-earned cash speculating whether Barry Bonds will outperform Sammy Sosa over the course of the season.

"And those numbers," Barmack adds, "don't even account for all the people playing games for free. We, for example, offer a stripped-down version of our fantasy game that doesn't cost anything to play — and it has 500,000 teams registered."

The basic fantasy baseball concept is this: Average joes choose a team of major league players, and then track the players' real-life statistics in categories such as home runs, strikeouts and batting average over the course of a season. The better their players perform, the more they win.

"I love baseball and I love competition," says Dean Nichols, 29, a former Framingham High baseball player who now coaches soccer at Framingham State. "As I get a little older, it's a way for me to keep competing. I've always liked to win."



"I consider it a very important part of my relaxation," says Dale Tamburro of Weston, an attorney who operates his own practice in Belmont. "I mean, I'm 43, with a wife, two kids and a business. With a busy personal and private life, there's a lot I don't have time to do. This is a source of entertainment that's a really necessary part of my existence."

Some fantasy gamers play just for bragging rights among their friends. Others, like Tamburro, like to make things a bit interesting by putting a cash wager on their teams. (In Tamburro's current league of 12 players, the entrance fee is $300 a head.) And then, there are the hard-core players like Gilbert.

"Each league I'm in on CBS Sportsline has an entrance fee of $30, and I have 32 teams," Gilbert says. "With the prize money they offer, I've figured out that I need to win about 20 percent of my leagues to break even. I usually win between 40

The green goddess returns

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The Palace Hotel in San Francisco invented Green Goddess Dressing in honor of the actor George Arliss who stayed at the hotel while starring in William Archer's play, "The Green Goddess." This is a creamy (mayonnaise and sour cream) herb-packed dressing that can be used on a tossed salad or as a dip for crudités. Ideally it should be bursting with herb flavor with a well-balanced creamy base to carry the flavors. When badly made, Green Goddess dressing is green in color but totally lacking in flavor (dulled by a heavy hand with the dairy products) or completely unbalanced by the overwhelming taste of anchovy or garlic.

Many recipes call for an equal pairing of mayonnaise and sour cream, but I also tested various ratios as well as other dairy products such as yogurt, cream, cream cheese, and buttermilk. The 50/50 marriage came out on top, offering just the right amount of richness from the mayo and a pleasant cool tang from the sour cream. I also tested low- and no-fat dairy alternatives and found the low-fat to be an option while the no-fat was indescribable.

As for the "green" part of Green Goddess Dressing, parsley was one of the few ingredients that appeared in every recipe. I tested anywhere from 2 tablespoons to 1/3 cup and thought 1/4 cup gave big flavor without tasting too "green." I also found the parsley was easy to combine with other herbs to boost flavor. One quarter cup chives was also a winner. I also tested green onion but preferred the chives since they are milder. However, I didn't want the chives pureed into the dressing as I did the parsley. I added them at the end and pulsed them a couple of times to blend. Other herbs tested included tarragon, chervil, dill, basil, and cilantro. I really liked one tablespoon each of tarragon and chervil.

Garlic was problematic since it often overwhelmed the other flavors. I found it unsettling even if I used only a miniscule half-clove. Instead, a small shallot was milder and worked well with the chives. Most recipes also include some anchovy. To be honest, I had a slight preference for the dressing without anchovy, so I have listed it (one good size fillet) as an optional ingredient. Without it, I feel that the dressing has a cleaner, fresher taste.

As for other ingredients, lemon juice won out over white wine vinegar, white balsamic vinegar, and rice wine vinegar. Salt and pepper were also welcome. As for method, the food processor made this recipe a snap although the chives are best left intact.

GREEN GODDESS DRESSING

The dressing may be used immediately, but a rest of an hour or so in the refrigerator allows the flavors to improve. This dressing is best used within a day of preparation. This makes enough dressing for a large salad or can be used as a dip. Either way it should be served cold or cool.

1/2 cup mayonnaise (regular or low fat)
1/2 cup sour cream (regular or low fat)
1/4 cup flat parsley leaves
1 tablespoon tarragon or chervil leaves
1 small shallot, chopped (about 2 teaspoons)
1 large or two small anchovy fillets, chopped (optional)
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1/4 cup finely chopped chives
1/8 teaspoon salt (reduced to a generous pinch if using the optional anchovy)
Freshly ground pepper to taste

Place first seven ingredients (the mayonnaise through the lemon juice) in the bowl of a food processor fitted with the metal blade. Process until the parsley is very finely chopped and the mixture is pale green. Add the chives, salt and pepper and pulse once or twice to evenly incorporate the chives. Taste for seasoning and adjust with salt if necessary. Refrigerate, covered, for an hour to allow flavors to meld. May be refrigerated overnight. Serve cold as a salad dressing or a dip for crudités.

Makes about 1 1/4 cups

and 60 percent of my leagues, so I've made a few thousand bucks profit the last couple of years."

The rise of fantasy baseball corresponds directly with the rise of the Internet. All aspects of the game — research, league-building and tracking statistics — are ideally suited the Web.

Players come from all backgrounds, from lawyers like Tamburro to college students and even younger. Gilbert, in fact, runs a special fantasy baseball league out of his store for some of the children who are his steady customers.

Their demographics may vary wildly, but all successful players agree on one thing: In order to rise to the top of your fantasy heap, you have to do your research.

"When it comes to preparing, I think I'm pretty good about it," says Gilbert, gesturing toward a pile of reference materials that includes publications such as USA Today's Sports Weekly and The Sporting News' Fantasy Baseball Owners Manual. "Luckily, my line of work helps with preparation time — I can do it at work if there aren't a lot of customers. But, I read every box score, follow the spring training statistics ... it never stops, really."

"I only take about three months off — October, November and December is the dead time. By January, we start talking trades again," Tamburro admits.

It's that fanatical level of devotion that fantasy baseball inspires in its brethren that tends to bemuse, amuse and occasionally enrage the loved ones who share a fantasy player's universe.

"Oh, my family thinks I'm a little crazy," Tamburro chuckles. "My wife has, at times, had very little patience for it — I get phone calls in the car, at night when I'm watching TV with my kids, from players wanting to talk trades and things. So, I generally try to talk most of my fantasy talk in my car when I'm on my way to or from work, so it doesn't cut into family time."

"My wife is into baseball herself, so she's pretty good about understanding," says Gilbert. "She doesn't even mind that I'll be on the computer at 4 a.m., so that I can pick up a player as he comes off the waiver wire and becomes a free agent."

Nichols isn't as lucky.

"Most of my family and friends don't get it," he says. "They wonder how I can spend all the time that I do on it. My wife thinks I'm a nutjob — and I guess sometimes I am."

Sow and grow your own garden

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Signs of spring are beginning to appear everywhere you go on the South Shore as several mild sunny days help to soothe our memories of April snow and the recent deluges that flooded homes and waterlogged our landscapes. Gardens are dotted with clusters of crocuses, snowdrops, daffodils, iris, pale-colored Chionodoxa, and deep blue Siberian squill. Throughout the garden, bulbs and perennials are quickly coming to life now that milder springtime weather has finally arrived.

Several hours of clipping and raking on a bright Sunday afternoon produced several tidy perennial borders and mountains of refuse for the compost heap. The shady borders tend to be my first priority as many of the perennials in these gardens bloom early in the season before the trees leaf out. Innumerable animal trails were evident beneath the leaf litter but only time will tell how much damage they may have inflicted on the underlying bulbs and perennials.

As dusk approached and temperatures became chilly, I reluctantly hauled one last tarp to the compost pile. Invigorated by the fresh air and exercise, I spent the evening rooting cuttings and sowing seeds for perennials, annuals and vegetables to fill my gardens with flowers and produce this summer.

Each season, I prepare a timetable for starting seeds once I have acquired the essential supplies and seed packets. If you plan to start seeds, consult the seed packets, catalogs and books for instructions. Do not start seeds earlier than recommended. Perennials tend to grow more slowly and can be started up to 12 week before the last frost. Most annuals and vegetables should wait until six to eight weeks prior to Memorial Day to be sown. Seedlings are best transplanted to their final location before they are budded or flowering. Very little is gained and much can be lost by sowing seeds too early or rushing to transfer seedlings into the ground.

The lightweight, soilless growing mediums are best moistened thoroughly before sowing the seeds, preferably by placing the filled containers in a sink or dishpan of warm water and allowing the water to be drawn up from below. Containers should be filled to approximately 1/2 inch from the top once the medium is moist and gently tamped which may require that additional medium be added. Allow the medium to drain for an hour or two before sowing as it should be moist but not waterlogged.

Once the seeds have been sown, place the container into a clear plastic bag and tightly secure. This will prevent the medium from drying out. The bag should not rest on the medium.

Seedlings are easiest to transplant when sown in rows. Use a pencil or label to press a row into the growing medium. Sow about twice the number of seeds as the number of seedlings desired. Tap seeds from the packet as evenly as possible, leaving ample space between them or transfer the seeds to a creased piece of paper and gently tap them into rows. Use the tip of a pencil to separate seeds that are too close together. Very fine seeds may have to be broadcast over the medium and gently pressed into the surface or lightly misted. Use the same process for seeds, which require light for germination. Cover larger seeds with dry medium 1 to 2 times the thickness of the seed. Moisten with a gentle mist. Be sure to label each container with the date and type of seed planted.

Once the seeds have been sown, place the container into a clear plastic bag and tightly secure. This will prevent the medium from drying out. The bag should not rest on the medium. Use extra labels or Popsicle sticks around the perimeter of the container to raise the plastic off the growing surface. Many seed starting kits come with a clear plastic dome, which fits securely over the growing cells. Place the container in good light or under a fluorescent fixture but avoid placing it in direct sunlight unless high temperatures are required for germination. Check regularly and remove the plastic bag as soon as a number of the seeds sprout. Gradually move to stronger light, preferably a south-facing window. Turn your container regularly if you are growing your seedlings in a sunny window for symmetrical, stronger plants. Low light will produce tall, spindly, weak seedlings.

Keep the growing medium evenly moist. Bottom watering is preferred. Start fertilizing with 1/4-strength liquid fertilizer once the first set of true leaves appears (not the original two seed leaves) and gradually increase to 1/2-strength as the plants mature. Thin overcrowded seedlings by snipping or pinching weaker seedlings off at the base once the seedlings have four true leaves. It is usually best to transplant seedlings once before transferring the plants to the garden. Be sure to "harden off" tender seedlings for several days by gradually introducing them to the outdoors after all danger of frost has passed. Place seedlings initially into a partly shaded location and then expose them for short periods of sunlight early and late in the day before transplanting them into a sunny location.

There is a tremendous sense of pride and accomplishment when you successfully grow plants from seed. Discover the magic of watching a tiny seed germinate and grow to produce a clump of exquisite flowers or a vine covered with delicious, plump tomatoes at a fraction of the cost of buying flats or individual plants.

Green Men" and the giant, papermache lobster in "Catch of the Day." Another abstract piece, "Outdoor Frozen Shower," is a simple shower faucet coated with an extra tone of blue filter for a behind-the-glass look.

"I do my own printing with black-and-white shots, and all my color work in labs," said Correia at the recent opening reception for the show. "I like to experiment with the latest in digital equipment a lot, but all my black-and-white work is done the old-fashioned way, in the dark room, with all my own matboard cutting."

Correia's work will be on display at the Ventress Library Gallery, Webster Street in Marshfield Center through May 24. LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127
HOW KIDS REALLY HEAR
Traditional hearing tests do not effectively evaluate how well children can tune in some sounds and tune out others. Recently, however, a new hearing test that simulates real-world noise may increase knowledge of children's hearing and potential development and learning disabilities. The new test exposes children to a variety of competing noises. In the test, children sit at a computer surrounded by a semi-circle of loudspeakers and listen for words that match the pictures on the screen. At times, only one voice asks them to point out an object. At others, only one voice, amid many, may ask to identify an object. Each child's ability to separate the different speakers varies, owing to individual rates of auditory and cognitive development.
According to some statistics, nearly 20 percent of the hearing impaired are school age children. Undetected or neglected hearing problems in youngsters and infants can prevent a child's early intellectual and social development. Maximize your child's potential by protecting his or her hearing. For complete hearing services for the hearing impaired, young or old, we welcome your call at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 781-337-1144. We're located at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, and we also have an office in Abington.
P.S. Adults are more adept at the hearing task described above because many aspects of hearing continue to develop into the teen years.

'Superstar' — an Easter tradition

Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber's "Jesus Christ Superstar" opened on Broadway in 1971, becoming the first Rice and Lloyd Webber to be produced professionally. From his entry into Jerusalem on Palm Sunday through his death at the hands of Pontius Pilate, "Jesus Christ Superstar" is an epic retelling of the last seven days of the life of Jesus of Nazareth. Fueled by the fierce rock rhythms and searing ballads like "I Don't Know How To Love Him," "Could We Start Again Please," and the memorable title song, the original cast recording of the show spent several weeks atop the American album charts.

The first national touring company opened on the West Coast in the summer of 1972, with pop vocalist Carl Anderson in the role of Judas. Anderson also played Judas in Director Norman Jewison's 1973 feature film version, shot entirely on location in Israel. In the three decades since it first opened, "Jesus Christ Superstar" has regularly toured the world and also been revived in both London and New York. The current national tour — with direction by Kevin Moriarty and choreography David Wilder — again features Carl Anderson as Judas. He may not be a big-haired rocker, but Anderson has also enjoyed his own pop music fame. The performer and recording artist is perhaps best-known for his 1988 mega-hit duet with Gloria Loring, "Friends and Lovers."

Carl Anderson stars in "Jesus Christ Superstar" at the Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont Street, Boston, through Easter Sunday. For tickets and information, call 1-800-447-7400 or visit www.wangcenter.org.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16

Yesterday's planetary influences are in effect today as well. Take on a full work agenda and stick with it. You can be most productive. The full moon culminates at 3:36 p.m., when the moon and sun oppose at 26 1/2-degrees Libra-Aries. The moon aligns with Mars at 4:22 p.m. and becomes inactive. A Scorpio moon takes over at 9:16 p.m. Venus forms a 90-degree alignment to Saturn, urging you to do some serious soul-searching. Instead of trying to change others or control situations, look within, change your thinking and find a new course of action for yourself.

THURSDAY, APRIL 17

This day has its challenges. Stop, look and listen. A serious Scorpio moon forms 90-degree contacts to Jupiter at 10:25 a.m. and Neptune at 5:44 p.m. Others may be hypersensitive, difficult to get along with. Don't make waves. In addition, the sun forms a 90-degree contact to combative Mars. This combination of planetary influences is favorable for developing projects that require study, research, investigation. Spend time alone. Strive for greater spiritual vision.

FRIDAY, APRIL 18

A Scorpio moon continues to evoke intense emotions. Pursue activities that help you to vent and maintain perspective. Your mental attitude will make all the difference. Keep your mind and hands busy with practical projects. The Scorpio moon interacts with Mars at 5:52 p.m. and becomes inactive. Influences turn around completely at 8:51 p.m., when the moon enters outgoing Sagittarius. A lunar alignment to Uranus prompts you to go with your wild side this evening.

SATURDAY, APRIL 19

Get an early start to this day. A lunar alignment to Jupiter at 10:31 a.m. offers a 'last chance' opportunity for getting major projects off the ground. After that the red light goes on. Signing contracts or launching major enterprises are off limits until May 21. On the other hand, this day rates high across the board. People will be feeling upbeat, energetic, optimistic. Influences are also prime for traveling, socializing, enjoying favorite pastimes.

SUNDAY, APRIL 20

Although the moon travels in optimistic Sagittarius, there are a couple of rough spots in the day. A lunar alignment to Pluto at 5:06 a.m. warns you to avoid morning hassles. A lunar opposition to Saturn between 11:55 a.m.-2:55 p.m. may bring a lull period. The remainder of the afternoon and evening are prime for spending quality time with friends and family, enjoying life's blessings. The sun moves into Taurus at 8:03 a.m., remaining there until May 21. The Sagittarius moon becomes inactive at 9:02 p.m. until 10:20 p.m., when it enters Capricorn.

MONDAY, APRIL 21

The planets Venus and Mars take center stage today. At 4:50 a.m. Venus forms a harmonious 60-degree alignment to Mars. At 12:18 p.m. Venus enters Aries, traveling there until May 16. Mars enters Aquarius at 7:48 p.m., remaining there until June 16. This combination places the focus on relationship matters, bringing a time that is ideal for improving the quality of key partnerships. Plan a weekend getaway or a special event with loved ones.

TUESDAY, APRIL 22

Although the moon travels in practical Capricorn, it may be difficult to get a lot accomplished today. You must carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. The Capricorn moon aligns with Mercury at 8:40 a.m. and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. A flowing 60-degree alignment of the sun and Uranus generates a restless mood. Take extra time out for yourself. Step out of your usual routine; do something different today.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23

An Aquarius moon takes over at 2:58 a.m., remaining there for the next two and one-half days. Networking and innovative thinking become principal themes. The moon aligns with Mars at 4:27 a.m., Venus at 6:51 a.m. The last quarter phase of the moon begins at 8:18 a.m. This moon decreases in light until May 1, when a new moon occurs. There is one potential stumbling block, however, in effect between 4:50-7:50 p.m., when the moon opposes Jupiter. Be careful not to go to extremes; balance optimism with discretion.

THURSDAY, APRIL 24

An Aquarius moon makes this day great for developing projects that need help or support from others. Keep an open mind. Try new ideas or techniques to solve old problems. You can achieve breakthroughs, sudden insights. The moon interacts with Neptune in the morning and Pluto, Mercury in the afternoon. All social activities are highlighted this evening. Gather with friends and enjoy good food, music, conversation.

FRIDAY, APRIL 25

This can be a 'fun' day, if you don't have a lot to do. If you are working, it is best to handle routine chores and finish old business. Don't take on more than you can handle. Allow extra time for unanticipated delays or distractions. The Aquarius moon becomes inactive at 2:18 a.m. until 11:02 a.m., when a Pisces moon takes over. At 3:04 p.m. the moon aligns with Uranus, prompting you to get an early start to the weekend. Enjoy favorite hobbies, sports; spend extra time with friends and family. Follow your bliss.

Grant extension could be crucial

Direction of village work on the table

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

A request for an extension on a $1.5 million state grant originally slated to pay for streetscape improvements to Cohasset Village is still under review, according to the state's Executive Office of Transportation and Construction (EOTC).

The grant extension was requested by Town Manager Mark Haddad at the direction of selectmen after their meeting last week.

"We just received it two days ago," said E.J. Weldon, press secretary for the EOTC. "Because the review process is ongoing, we're not going to comment on this particular case, except to say that were going to work as quickly as we can to expedite the process."

Weldon said the process did not have a set timeline. "We'll look at the feasibility for finishing it, what progress has been made," he said of the review process.

"We've been doing this thing for almost four years now and nobody starts screaming and yelling until we're about to put the shovel in the ground."
— Selectman Merle Brown

Whether the extension is decided upon by the selectmen's meeting next Tuesday could be a crucial factor in deciding the future of the village.

Last Tuesday, selectmen and downtown merchants seemed to be less than an hour away from completing a final review of designs for improvements to streets and sidewalks in the village. The hope was to put the long-awaited streetscape revitalization project to bid by April 30.

But a group of merchants led by Tom Hamilton of Dean and Hamilton Realtors convinced

Independence Bldg. offered for $385K

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The historic Independence Building is on the market again.

Owners Thomas and Lauren Koncius paid the Town $100,100 for the property in 1999. After investing in a series of renovations, they are now asking for $385,000, down from $399,000 when the building first went on the market a month ago.

"There's only a limited amount of village space, and the uniqueness of the building itself supports the value."
— Thomas Koncius, owner

The Independence Building, which has a storied history, is for sale again.

Located in Cohasset Village at 24 South Main St., the Independence Building is built into the ledge just below St. Stephen's Episcopal Church. It has a storied history, reflected in part by the two jail cells that are still housed on its first floor.

Erected sometime around 1890, the building has served as a fire station, a police station, a gown museum, a law office and a teen center. It was owned by the Town until the Konciuses purchased it.

The building was most recently home to Cohasset Greenery, a flower shop. When owner Alida Dean announced she was moving her business to the space above Cohasset Hardware (formerly home to the Pottery Loft), the Konciuses decided to put the property on the market.

This is the sixth property that the Konciuses, who own and run Atlantic Brokerage Group at 9 Depot Court, have purchased and renovated on the South Shore. They recently sold a house that they renovated in Scituate and are now living in and renovating another house on South Main Street in Cohasset.

Renovations that the Konciuses have made to the Independence Building over the last three years include the addition of a cupola, a new

No taste for Salt House plan

Expansion means more congestion

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

"A valet parking plan does not solve all the problems."
— Sam Knox, 23 Border St.

Residents from around Cohasset Harbor flooded the Zoning Board of Appeals meeting Tuesday night to voice their opposition to a new parking plan for the Olde Salt House restaurant on Border Street.

The plan calls for a valet parking system and essentially creates large parking grids at Cohasset Harbor Inn (Kimball's) and its off-street parking lot on Elm Street.

The additional parking — 42 spaces — would allow the Olde Salt House to expand its occupancy from 52 to 99 patrons. Technically, it provides 20 spaces more than required for the expansion.

The Inn, the Olde Salt House and Atlantica are all owned by Peter Roy, a Cohasset resident.

The parking plan is before the Zoning Board because it would require a variance. Two of the plan's components — the use of valet parking and the use of off-street parking that is more than

All meetings are at Town Hall unless posted otherwise.

Water plant's 25th anniversary

All Cohasset residents are invited to the 25th Anniversary Ceremony at 1 p.m. on May 11 to commemorate the 25th year of operation of the Aaron River Reservoir and the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant.

"On May 11, 1978, Cohasset residents ended years of summer watering bans and water shortages," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission. "During the past 25 years we have had the benefit a vast water resource, the 323 million gallon capacity Aaron River Reservoir, that is the envy of other cities and towns."

Special recognition will be made at the event to former town officials and others who helped with the long process to build the teservoir and treatment plant, and to former Water Commissioners, said McNabb.

The anniversary ceremony will be held on the Aaron River Dam, which residents can get to by parking at the end of Beechwood Street or on Aaron River Road.

Keep well clinic

The Board of Health will sponsor the following Keep Well Clinic:

- Thursday April 24 from 1-3 p.m. at the Harborview Senior Housing on Elm Street.

40 Parker Ave. being renovated

The Zoning Board of Appeals granted a special permit to the Town to alter a building at 40 Parker Ave at Mariner's Park (formerly the Hagerty Property).

The building will be renovated at a cost of about $100,000 and will be partially funded by the Community Preservation Act. It will be used primarily by the Cohasset Student Center for Coastal Research, with the second floor being leased as studio space to the South Shore Art Center. It will also house two public restrooms.

As a condition of the special permit, the Zoning Board ruled that the bathrooms may only remain open from sunrise to sunset and daily cleaning must be provided.

Open Space seeks some new members

The Open Space Advisory Committee is seeking several new members. The committee is responsible for implementing recommendations in the Open Space Plan, including identifying properties to conserve that will protect Cohasset's water supply, wetlands, wildlife habitats and scenic resources. The committee will also be working on other recommendations in the plan including greater opportunities for walking and bicycling, improved access to the waterfront, and access to recreational resources for the disabled. Recently, many members worked on the Barnes property acquisition.

The committee welcomes new members who are prepared to "roll up their sleeves" and make a difference. If you are interested in learning more, please contact Debbie Cook at 781-383-6313 or cookmc@attbi.com

Flag depository at American Legion

The American Legion, George H. Mealy Post 118 in Cohasset has a way for the public to be able to bring them their tattered and worn flags so they may be properly and ceremoniously destroyed. The Flag Depository, located in front of the legion post at 98 Summer St., has the look and shape of an American flag. This solid metal Flag Depository protects the flags until they are removed for storage and kept until the time of the desecration ceremony. The Herb Chambers Automobile Dealerships made this service possible through a donation to the post. Everyone is invited to bring his or her retired flags to the depository.

School business manager's trial to start April 29

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The trial of school business manager Ivan Klimko will begin April 29 at 9 a.m. in Hingham District Court.

Klimko is charged with assault and battery after an alleged domestic dispute with his wife in November. He was originally charged with attempted murder as well, but the District Attorney's office dropped that charge in December due to lack of evidence.

His trial was initially set to begin March 21 but was rescheduled.

Police arrested Klimko in the early morning of Nov. 3 after his wife was spotted attempting to flag down cars near the couple's home on George Washington Boulevard in Hull.

Police said the alleged victim told them her husband had tried to strangle her and threatened to kill her. A police report by the arresting officer said there were "fresh scratches and red marks on her throat."

Klimko was released on $1,000 bail with the condition that he surrender his passport, stay alcohol free, and stay away from his wife. His trial was initially set to begin March 21 but was rescheduled.

Reached at his office at Cohasset Middle High School, Klimko declined to comment.

Klimko was hired as the business manager for Cohasset Public Schools almost two years ago after working in the Vista United school district in California.

After being suspended from his job following his arrest, Klimko was reinstated by Superintendent Edward Malvey in early January when the attempted murder charge was dropped.

Malvey said the school was legally obligated to reinstate Klimko and also give him his full back pay. He declined to comment on what would happen if Klimko was convicted of assault and battery.

Property tax bills due

The Town of Cohasset has issued the Fiscal Year 2003 fourth quarter tax bills due May 1. Anyone who has not received their tax bill should contact the Board of Assessors at 781-383-4114 to confirm their correct mailing address or the Treasurer/Collector at 781-383-4102 for a copy of the tax bill.

Online with eBill

On April 14, the Town of Cohasset began offering residents the option of paying their Real Estate tax bills via the Internet.

On April 14, the Town of Cohasset began offering residents the option of paying their Real Estate tax bills via the Internet.

The eBill system takes the Town's billing data and posts it on the Metropolitan Communications (MCC) web site, which allows residents to view and pay their real estate tax bills. At 25 cents per transaction, the new payment option costs residents less than a stamp.

Residents can arrange for bill payments to be automatically withdrawn from their checking or savings account, and eBill will be accepting credit card payments shortly.

Currently, residents are able to pay real estate tax bills with eBill. This summer, residents will also be able to pay motor vehicle excise and water/sewer bills using eBill.

To find out more information, or to make a payment, residents should visit the eBill website at www.mcc.net

Voluntary contributions

Over the past two years, thousands of dollars have been raised through the voluntary contribution program. However, there is still a way to go before the fund balances will be sufficient to grant awards. Your continued support is greatly appreciated! To make a voluntary contribution simply complete line two of your tax bill and add that contribution to the amount due. The following is a description of the three available funds:

Scholarship Fund will provide secondary school tuition assistance to deserving Town residents. These funds will be in addition to scholarships currently available to Town residents.

Educational Fund will provide supplemental educational funding for the Cohasset Public Schools. Additionally, funds may be used for existing adult literacy programs.

Elderly/Disabled Fund will provide property tax relief for elderly and disabled Cohasset taxpayers who meet specific criteria established by the Elderly/Disabled Fund committee.

Scituate gun workshop gives local police more firepower

By Mary Ford

Cohasset Det. Rick Grassie, who is the senior weapons instructor for the CPD, qualifies on his handgun at the Scituate Rod and Gun Club.

The job of a police officer in Cohasset or Scituate is very different from that of one in the inner city, where drive-by shootings, murder and violent crime are the norm. In small towns along the South Shore, officers are far more likely to write a speeding or parking ticket than fire their weapon.

But nevertheless, quiet suburban communities are not immune to serious crime and the need for police officers to be trained to use a gun if needed.

To that end, the Scituate Rod and Gun Club off Route 3A provided the setting Tuesday for weapons' instruction for firearms training officers from Cohasset, Scituate, Hull, Weymouth, Rockland, Eastham, Swansea and Plympton. Those who took part will help qualify the officers in their respective departments on their firearms.

Jim Ring, who is statewide coordinator for firearms training with the Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council, led the workshop that included classroom instruction and target shooting.

Ring, who served 32 years as a police officer before "retiring" and racking up 10 years as an instructor, gets even more serious when asked why small-town police need to be proficient with firearms.

"There are no guarantees," he says about never confronting an incident that may require an officer to use his weapon. "The only guarantees in life are death and taxes."

Case in point is Cohasset, which is from all accounts a peaceful, affluent community of about 7,000 people.

Yet in the past 10 years, there have been three armed bank robberies in town; and in the past 25 years, two murders and a murder suicide. Last summer there was an armed home invasion and just last month, police used their ballistic shields to approach a home in which a man was reportedly holed up with a gun threatening to kill himself. (The incident ended without a weapon being fired).

"Stuff goes on," says Officer Christy Tarantino. "It's better we have equipment at our disposal than not have it and need it."

Det. Rick Grassie and Tarantino are the certified weapons instructors for the Cohasset Police Department. And although neither officer has ever had to fire a weapon at anyone in the line of duty — they're very serious about their training and the necessity to help qualify their fellow officers. Both men have completed a 40-hour course to become state-certified instructors and "re-up" their qualifications every two years with a course like the one Ring conducted in Scituate this week. All officers need to qualify on their weapons at a minimum of twice a year; four times is better. This past fall, Cohasset officers also qualified at night. Considering two-thirds of any police department works either the 4 p.m.-12 a.m. shift or the 12 -8 a.m. shift, night training cannot be understated, Grassie explained.

All Cohasset officers carry 40-caliber, semi-automatic handguns; and there is a 12-gauge shotgun in each cruiser. Grassie and Tarantino are the only two trained to use the military-style patrol rifle that is kept at the station under lock and key until needed. The rifle might be needed in a barricade or hostage situation, Tarantino explained. The rifle has a range of 150-200 yards , about double that of a shotgun.

The workshop wasn't all about guns, however. The officers also discussed other tools they have such as pepper spray and their ASP (Armament System Procedure) or nightstick. Verbal commands and empty hand controls (using the hand to direct a suspect) are also part of an officer's repertoire. When, where and under what circumstances to use a weapon or other control device is up to the officer's discretion.

Ring said being careful, cautious and keeping their wits about them are critical.

"I didn't get to be this age by being stupid," he said.

The officers at the training session expressed concerns about budget cutbacks in these tight fiscal times and the effect that may have on training. There is also a shortage of ranges where officers can obtain the necessary training.

"It's like prisons, no one wants a shooting range in their town," Ring explained. As a citizen he also said he is concerned with potential cutbacks in training for all public safety personnel.

"Are you going to call the principal of a school if you have a heart attack?" Ring asked.

Grant extension could be crucial

selectmen to give more thought to making the burying or repositioning of utility wires in the village a priority.

Instead of completing the design review, selectmen agreed to apply for a one-year extension on the $1.5 million Public Works Economic Development grant that will pay for the project. They invited the merchants to their meeting on April 29.

At that meeting, it appears that Selectmen will make some decisions on how to move forward with the village project.

Selectman Fred Koed said in an interview this week that a one-year grant extension would give selectmen "breathing room" to decide whether to reprioritize the project. "That takes the pressure off," he said.

Extension or not, selectmen will ultimately have to decide whether to go ahead with the project as planned or to make burying or moving the wires their first goal. As of now, the state grant must be spent — meaning construction must be practically completed — by June 30, 2003. According to the Waterfield Design Group, hired to design the streetscape revitalization, the project would take nine months to complete.

Hamilton said many merchants and residents want to see the wires buried, at least on South Main Street if nowhere else. "I think for some of us, it's always been a number one priority," he said. "If you don't get rid of the utilities now, you're probably not going to think about it for another hundred years."

Given a grant extension, selectmen would have more time to look into burying wires or possibly moving them behind the downtown shops, as one resident has suggested. If one of those options proved to be financially viable, then selectmen could choose to explore it, using a combination of merchants' funds and grant money.

Hamilton said merchants have raised $200,000 for the project and are working on raising another $100,000. But the added cost of putting the wires underground has been estimated at $800,000. Meanwhile, burying the conduits — so that wires could be buried in the future — has been estimated at $550,000.

Given those figures, it appears that burying or moving the wires in one portion of the downtown area could mean taking out a sidewalk and street improvements in another area — another tough decision that would be left to the selectmen.

Selectman Merle Brown said in an interview this week that he was ready to push forward with the project this summer, regardless of a potential grant extension.

"I think it's time to get going on this project," he said. "We're just spending more money on the Waterfield Group doing studies and changes. We've been doing this thing for almost four years now and nobody starts screaming and yelling until we're about to put the shovel in the ground."

Koed expressed concern that money from the merchants would need to be up-front, and not come in over time, or else the Town would need to take out a loan to finance the project, which would require a vote at Town Meeting.

Brown said more feedback was needed from residents on how to proceed next week. "We still haven't heard anything (since last week)," he said. "We'd like to hear from the people from the town."

License your dogs, or else!

ACO to impose fines after May 1

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy is planning to do his part to help the town through this year's budget crunch.

In the past, Murphy has shied away from charging fines when residents fail to license their dogs by May 1. This year, he'll be enforcing that fine, an effort that he says could produce as much as $3,000 in additional revenue for the town's general fund.

"A lot of people think that because their dog doesn't leave the house, it doesn't have to be licensed. That's wrong."
— Paul Murphy, Animal Control Officer

"It's always been there. We just haven't really enforced it," Murphy said of the $25 fine that becomes enforceable next Thursday. "But with the financial climate these days, it's a good source of revenue."

Murphy said he thought of the idea after Town Manager Mark Haddad asked all town departments to come up with ways to potentially generate more revenue for the town.

"You hate to penalize the poor taxpayers. They're suffering heavy tax burdens, but it's a resource to the town," he said.

For a dog to be licensed, it must first be vaccinated against rabies, Murphy said. Then, a fee must be paid to the Town Clerk's office. For spayed or neutered dogs, the fee is $8. For other dogs, it's $15.

"That's across the nation — you always get a reduction if your dog is spayed or neutered," Murphy said. "It's an incentive."

After paying for a license, owners must put collars on their dogs with license and rabies tags. Owners of dogs without those tags can also be fined $25.

Murphy said there are some common misconceptions about dog licenses. "A lot of people think that because their dog doesn't leave the house, it doesn't have to be licensed. That's wrong," he said.

Licenses must be renewed every year and rabies vaccinations must be administered every three years after a dog reaches the age of six months. Murphy said rabies is very common in New England wildlife, especially among raccoons, skunks, bats, foxes and coyotes. During his five-year tenure in Cohasset, no dog has contracted the disease, but that doesn't mean all is safe.

"You'd be surprised how many times we get a call because a dog is fighting with a raccoon or a skunk," he said.

Rabies vaccinations are available through veterinarians but can also be obtained far more cheaply at local clinics. Cohasset's annual clinic has come and gone, but there is no residency requirement to be able to attend clinics in other towns.

Murphy said Cohasset dog owners would receive a mailing if they had not licensed their dogs by April 1, telling them to get it done by May 1 at the latest. After next week, Murphy will receive a list of potential offenders from the Town Clerk and begin making phone calls.

Since his position is only part-time, it may take him all summer, but after factoring out people who have moved or whose dogs have died, Murphy expects to find about 250 residents who have not licensed their dogs. And those who don't pay the fine will only end up in court.

"The law is the law and it must be enforced," Murphy said.

License Fees

- Male/Female: $15
- Spayed/ Neutered: $8

Licenses are good from Jan. 1 through Dec. 31.

Fines

Every dog owned or kept in the state must be licensed, collared and tagged, and vaccinated against rabies, by the time it reaches the age of six months. Failure to comply can result in the following penalties:

- Failure to license: $25
- Failure to vaccinate against rabies: $50
- Failure to collar and have license or rabies tags: $25
- Failure to answer dog ownership questions on annual town census: $10

Note: A dog license is relatively cheap compared to the applicable fines. Legal costs of owning an unlicensed dog that creates a problem or is a nuisance can be extremely high Also, having your phone number somewhere on your dog's collar is recommended. Stickers for this purpose are available at the Town Clerk's office.

Neighbors have no taste for the Salt House plan

500 feet from the establishment — are not allowed within the bylaws.

Charles Humphreys, a lawyer for the restaurant, told the Zoning Board the additional parking was needed to allow Atlantica and the Olde Salt House to sustain their business during peak summer hours.

"The problem is not the Salt House," Humphreys said. "The problem is a weekend night in the summer with a wedding — a wedding at Atlantica and a wedding at the Salt House. This is a peak time problem we're trying to solve."

According to the bylaws, to be granted a variance, the Olde Salt House must prove it suffers a hardship. Humphreys said the hardship was that the restaurant needed to be able to do the majority of its business in the summer, something that was prevented by the lack of parking in the harbor area.

"The fact is, it needs to have that capacity in order to maintain this thing," he said.

Humphreys dismissed the suggestion that the hardship was the fault of the restaurant itself. "That we allow a space to function properly is not a self-created hardship," he said.

But residents of the harbor area didn't see things quite like Humphreys. Sam Knox of 23 Border St. said the new parking plan would only exacerbate what was already a huge problem for neighbors.

"It is not this occasional event," Knox said. "It is basically every Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday night from May to September, when there's nowhere to park because every parking spot is taken up by an Atlantica customer, a Salt House customer or a hotel customer. To suggest that this is occasional is folly."

Knox added that valet parking would only encourage customers to seek out public parking spaces first so they wouldn't have to tip whoever parked their car.

"A valet parking plan does not solve all the problems — that is: lots of traffic, lots of noise, nowhere to park," he said.

Some residents worried that the delay caused by valet parking would constrict the flow of traffic and perhaps block emergency vehicles. Others said the restaurant was not showing a "good faith effort" to alleviate harbor noise and congestion.

Richard Karoff of 19 Border St. said the restaurant had no justification for its expansion. "It's not a hardship when you don't make as much money as you'd like to," he said.

Planning Board member Peter Pratt said the parking plan went against state and federal mandates to provide public access to the water. "At the end of the day, this is simply bad public policy and isn't good for the town going forward," he said.

Pratt was the minority on the Planning Board, which voted 3 to 1 to recommend approval of the plan, but only for one year, after which time it would be subject to review. Zoning Board Chairman Woody Chittick questioned whether that course of action was even legal.

The Zoning Board agreed to continue the hearing on the Salt House parking plan at its next meeting on May 19. In response to concerns of neighbors and the board, Chittick requested that the Salt House provide a study of traffic flow to show just how the valet system would work.

cedar roof, new siding, windows and shutters, and new heating and plumbing systems.

"Basically, we renovated the whole property," said Tom Koncius. "It was in real rough shape."

The Konciuses have secured a special permit from the Zoning Board of Appeals so that the building can be used a single-family home as well as a business. They also have an informal agreement for one parking spot in the St. Stephen's parking lot because a very small portion of that lot encroaches on the Independence Building property.

Tom Koncius said he was primarily looking to sell the property but would consider a lease "for the right tenant."

Already, he has received two offers to buy, one that planned to convert the building into an attorney's office and another that sought to make it into a nail salon. Both of the deals fell through.

Koncius said others had approached him informally about converting the building into a restaurant, a pub or a bistro. One of the proposals even included plans for a bar located inside one of the jails cells, he said.

Koncius said the building was ideal for a small business, live-in type situation. He said the rise in value of the property since he and his wife purchased it was well justified.

"There's only a limited amount of village space, and the uniqueness of the building itself supports the value," he said. "There's been a couple of other sales in the village that would support what we're asking."

According to the Assessors' Office, the property was assessed at $141,000 in January of 2002.

Koncius said that there were no historical preservation laws that would prevent future owners from ripping out the jail cells in the building, but it wasn't something he would recommend.

"To my knowledge, there's nothing preventing them from doing that," he said. "But I think they contribute to the property. I would never take them out. I think they're cool."

The old jail cells still remain inside the Independence Building which once housed the Cohasset Police Department.

The Independence Building got its name from its first use as home to Independence Fire Company No. 1, which housed the town's first, hand-pumped fire engine. It was converted into the town's first police station in 1913, when the fire department moved to another part of town. The town's police headquarters remained there until 1962, when a joint police and fire station was opened.

After police moved out, the Independence Building served as a gown museum for the Historical Society, which eventually left because the dampness was harmful to the dresses. Later, the building was home to a local lawyer, who attempted to buy the property but was turned off after a resident who wanted it reserved for affordable housing brought the matter to court. The building then served as the teen center for a few years until the current center was built at the former town DPW garage.

Alida Dean, owner of Cohasset Greenery, purchased her business from its previous owner after it had been located in the Independence Building for a year. Dean said she decided to move from the building because she wanted a studio space where she could "fine tune the floral work" of her business.

"I miss it already" she said of her old retail space. "I loved it. It's got a lot of charm. People used to come in just to gawk at the jail cells. It's got a great view of the church. It has a lot of personality."

King St. triangle back before ZBA

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The owner of the construction storage yard at the intersection of King Street and Route 3A is requesting a change of use for his property, but members of the Zoning Board say they lack the legal authority to grant the change.

Owner Joseph Rosano wants to build a mixed-use, two-story building on his land at 229 Chief Justice Cushing Highway. The building would be home to office space on the first floor and two, one-bedroom apartments on the second floor.

The problem is that Rosano's land is zoned residential. Its current use — for storage of sand, mulch, stone, bricks and other earth and construction materials — is allowed only because that use predates the institution of zoning in Cohasset in the 1950s.

Rosano's lawyer, Maureen Hurley, told the Zoning Board Tuesday night that her client needs only a special permit to change the current use. The Zoning Board, however, disagreed, saying that such a change would require a use variance, which the Zoning Board was prohibited from issuing by Town Meeting in 2001.

The difference in interpretation revolves around how a crucial sentence in the town bylaws in read. "I think it boils down to the definition of the word 'or'," Rosano said after the brief appearance before the Zoning Board Tuesday.

Hurley said in her next meeting before the board on May 19, she would provide case law to back up her interpretation, which is essentially that Rosano needs only to show that the new use of the property would be substantially less detrimental to the surrounding community than the existing use.

Joseph Rosano is seeking a special permit to develop the King Street triangle.

Rosano said his plan for development is different than that which he presented to the Zoning Board in 2000, when he asked for a series of variances for the property. That plan included reserving several parking spaces so that Rosano could display luxury used cars that he planned to recondition for sale. Rosano said his current plan omitted that request. He also said the two-story building would be a replica of a Cohasset home on the National Register of Historic Places.

"We're still trying to figure out why people aren't going for this."

— Joseph Rosano, owner

Rosano, who referred to the current use of his property as "a junkyard for earth materials," grew up across Route 3A on a plot of land currently occupied by a medical building.

Town records show that owners of the property have tried more than once to change its use. A variance for a business use was sought and denied in 1956, shortly after zoning lines were drawn. Rezoning to the Highway Business District was also sought and denied at Annual Town Meeting in 1978. And in 1992, variances were sought and denied to develop a doctor's office on the land.

In Rosano's last attempt in 2000, the Zoning Board said that the property did not suffer a hardship, which needs to be shown for a variance to be granted.

Rosano said the property wasn't suitable for a single family home because it was unsafe for children. He said the one-bedroom apartments were aimed at single people who could not afford a home. He said the property was surrounded by businesses already, so it would not be out of character with the neighborhood.

"We're still trying to figure out why people aren't going for this," he said. "We've tried to clean it up because we're tired of looking at it. All I want to do is to be able to clean it up and say, 'Yeah, I'm a good neighbor.'"

House budget cuts deeper

Cohasset's local aid slashed 12 percent

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The House Ways and Means Committee released its version of the state's fiscal year 2004 budget Wednesday. Town Finance Director Michael Buckley says the budget calls for a 12 percent cut in Cohasset's local aid.

Buckley said the reduction is about $60,000 more than the $307,000 cut outlined in Governor Mitt Romney's budget. The news means that town officials could need to revisit the operating budget later this year when the final version of the state budget is approved.

The town used the figures in Romney's budget, which called for a 10.9 percent cut in local aid, when it prepared the municipal budget that was approved at Town Meeting at the end of March. That budget was contingent upon a $350,000 general override that passed in a town-wide vote on April 5.

Buckley said the town may not have to revisit the operating budget if it generates additional revenue through new growth, local receipts or free cash. "It may turn out we're O.K.," he said.

Buckley also said he was still trying to determine whether the House budget funded school transportation reimbursement, a revenue source of $49,000 that Romney's budget cut completely.

Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, said most House members thought the cuts in Romney's budget simply wouldn't generate savings as predicted. "We believe some of his savings would be on the low end of his estimates," he said. "In some cases, the savings won't materialize as quickly as he thinks."

Bradley said the House budget includes more cautious estimates on what to expect in terms of savings. That, he said, has necessitated in deeper cuts in local aid.

But the news should not be a surprise, said Bradley, who has been telling town officials since January to expect a 15 to 20 percent cut in local aid.

In both the Governor's and the House budget, Cohasset was among the towns with the biggest cuts, percentage-wise, in local aid. Bradley said he was opposed to seeing wealthier towns like Cohasset hit harder by local aid reductions, but his view was in the minority. "I would much rather see those cuts across the board," he said.

About $2.5 billion has been cut from the state budget over the last two years, Bradley said. He said he expected between $2 and $2.5 billion would be cut this year, adding that it was "too early to tell" if more budget cuts would be needed in fiscal year 2005.

Bradley said it could be five to six years before the state sees another "progressive budget," his name for a budget that brings funding back above the level it achieved two years ago before any cuts were made.

House representatives have until Friday to file potential amendments to the House budget, which will then be passed on to the Senate where it will be debated through the end of May, Bradley said. He said the Legislature will then present its combined version of the budget to the Governor by late June. The Governor then has 10 days to sign or veto sections of that budget.

Bradley admitted that the budget-drafting process may be hard on municipalities looking to finalize their own operating budgets with only estimates of what reductions to expect in local aid.

"That's the way the process is set up," he said. "The only way to get around that is to go to your communities and tell them what to expect, and Sen. Hedlund and I have done that."

Starbucks sees summer move-in

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Starbucks Coffee could open at the former home of Fleet Bank in Tedeschi Plaza by midsummer.

Dan Brennan, a consultant for the gourmet coffee chain, told the Zoning Board Tuesday that an eight-week renovation to the building was set to begin in June. Brennan was before the Zoning Board because Starbucks falls into the fast-food restaurant category and requires a special permit.

The Zoning Board spent most of the hearing negotiating the size of signs for the coffee store. The biggest sign will be a 5-foot-diameter disc on a pylon, perpendicular to Route 3A. Two signs will be on the building itself, each between 12 and 16 square feet. All of the signs will be back-lit and will be turned on in sync with operating hours.

Brennan originally proposed a 9-foot diameter disc for the pylon but happily cooperated when board members informed him that would violate the 40-square-foot maximum for signs in the bylaw.

The new Starbucks will make use of the former bank's drive-thru window and will have 22 interior seats and 6 exterior seats for seasonal use.

The Zoning Board will issue a decision on the special permit at its meeting on May 19.

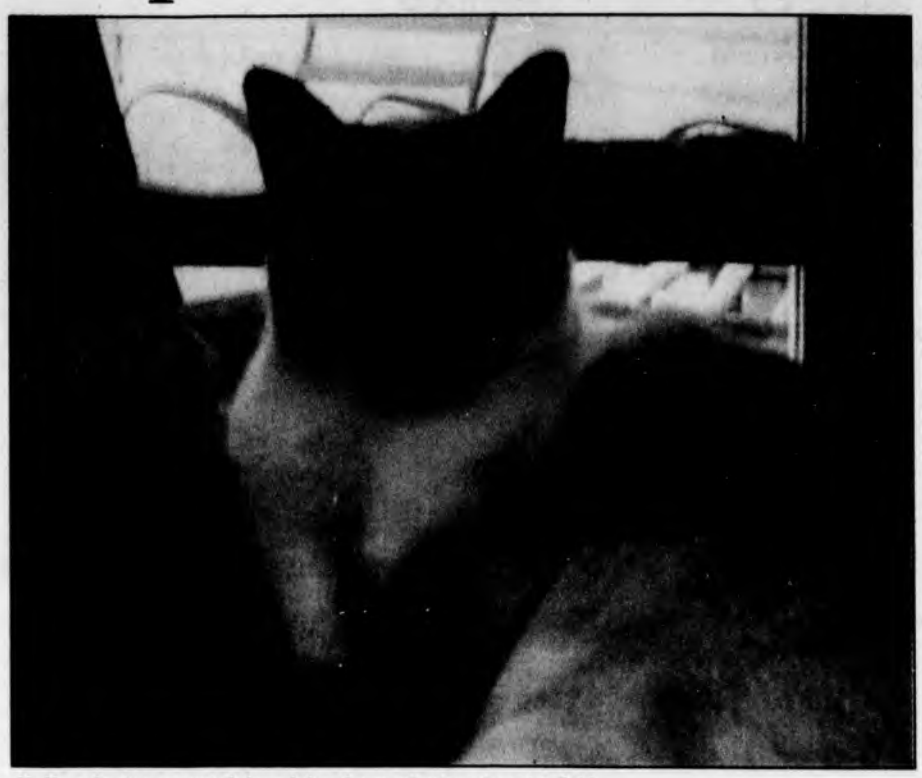
Can you help find KoKo the cat?

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK



KoKo, who is very much loved, has been missing since April 13.

ARCHIES' HONORS

There's some good news from Archbishop Williams High School in Braintree this week. Cohasset's Katie Portanova, a senior, has earned second honors for the third term. Keep up the good work, Katie!

NEAT MOTHER'S DAY GIFT

Looking for something to do or give to your mom on her special day? How about tickets to this year's Kitchen Tour, sponsored by the South Shore Community Center? This year the Tour will be held on May 2 from 10:30 a.m.-3 p.m. and will feature five fabulous kitchens right here in Cohasset. Tickets for the tour are $25 and may be purchased at the Center or by calling 781-383-0088. What a great way to celebrate a special day!

SCRAPBOOK WORKSHOP

Jeanne Astino, independent consultant for Creative Memories, wants to remind all of you that National Scrapbook Day is the first weekend in May! Spend your precious time doing something important — preserving your photos and stories — at a fun and productive workshop. Be a Memory Saver and "have a ball remembering it all." For more information call Jeanne at 781 383-2206.

ATTENTION GREEN THUMBS!

Have your "green thumbs" been anxious to get busy? Then you might want to attend "Growing Organic Seedlings" Saturday April 26, from 1-3 p.m. at Holly Hill Farm, 236 Jerusalem Road. Learn how to successfully grow your own organic vegetables and flowers from seed. This hands-on greenhouse workshop will cover potting mixes, containers, seed sources, planting schedules and more. $20 per person. To pre-register, please call 781-383-1455. The workshop is sponsored by the Friends of Holly Hill

ABBEY PLANT SALE

Speaking of plants – the annual Abbey Plant Sale is right around the corner and it's for a good cause! The sale is Saturday, May 10 from 8:30 a.m. to noon, on the grounds of Glastonbury Abbey, 16 Hull St. (Route 228) in Hingham. Perennials, herbs, ground cover, ornamental grasses and bushes will be on sale. Plants are all being donated from local, private gardens in the Hingham-Cohasset area.

Many plants will be divisions of specimens grown in the Abbey gardens. Seedlings-to-mature plants will be available to tempt local gardeners who join us at our 10th plant sale.

Proceeds are donated to the Benedictine Monks of Glastonbury Abbey and are used to continue the beautification of the Abbey grounds. Please join us for some great plant bargains.

For information about this event, call the Plant Sale Committee through the Abbey at 781-749-2155.

'SOUND OF MUSIC'

"The hills are alive with the sound of music!" Now, if you're like me, you'll be humming that tune all day. "The Sound of Music" is truly family entertainment and is going to be staged at Town Hall by our very own Cohasset Dramatic Club! Show dates are: May 2, 3, 9, 10, 16 & 17 at 7:30 p.m. and May 4, 11, & 18 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $12 and are available at Buttonwood Books and Spring Brook Kids in Cohasset, Front Street Book Store in Scituate, at the door or by phone at 781-544-0304. Girl Scout Troops receive a $2 discount on advanced purchase tickets. Contact Barbara Baumgarten for details at 781-383-1834. Sunday May 4 is "Seniors Day". All seniors receive a $2 discount. Call 781-544-0304 to reserve tickets.

HELP FIND KOKO

Those of you who have cats know what wonderful members of the family they are! So please help the Woods of Cedar Acres Lane find their lost Siamese cat KoKo. He was last seen on Sunday, April 13 near Heather Drive off of Forest Avenue in Cohasset. He is dark and fat, and he has no front claws. If found, please pick him up and contact the Woods at 781-383-1331 or 781-254-7188. He is extremely well-loved and missed.

CONSIGNMENT SHOP IS A TREASURE

As hard as it is to believe – there may be a few Cohasseters who have not discovered the Cohasset Consigment Shop at Tedeschi Plaza! Suffice it to say, it is not your ordinary consignment shop. Manager Andi Merrill and her small army of volunteers make sure it is never the same place twice; and the shop always holds treasures to be uncovered by myriad "treasure hunters" that come from towns all over the place.

Currently are 60 pieces of the rare, English, Minton China in the "Strawberry" pattern available, as well as 65 pieces of Royal Doulton China, including platters and soup tureen. A simple black dress by Ann Taylor, men's blue blazers, First Communion dresses, spring suits and women's pants suits are all good choices. Prom dresses as well as mother-of-the-bride attire are also part of the selection.

Andi also noted there was an unusual and large dress pin in the design of a spider's web with an assortment of four spiders on it. This unique brooch is a vintage piece. There is also a large assortment of gold and silver jewelry.

Through, the shop will be open Thursday evenings from 6-8 p.m. for consigning. Regular consigning hours are Monday through Friday from 10-11:30 a.m. Regular shop hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and on Sundays from noon to 4 p.m.

Proceeds from the shop benefit the charity's counseling services, oncology support groups, the Meals on Wheels program, a scholarship fund, confidential mental health services and other programs. If anyone would like to volunteer a few hours to this organization, we'd like to hear from you; please call 781-383-0687.

IT'S HAPPENING

Alzheimer's benefit brunch at Saporito's

"A Taste of Spring: A Wine Tasting Brunch," is the 11th annual fund-raising event for the Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore, Inc. The festivities will take place at Saporito's Florence Club Café in Hull on Sunday, May 18 at 1 p.m.

The event includes a five-course gourmet menu. Each course is accompanied by a wine selected by Mark Lewis of M.S. Walker Company who will explain the fine art of blending foods and wines. The Joe Micarelli Trio will provide a jazz accompaniment to the food and wine. Again, Andy and Mary Ann Saporito Boothroyd have selected from their culinary favorites to present an exciting menu. Lucky winners will be chosen for baskets of gourmet foods and wines gathered for the occasion.

All proceeds from this event underwrite ADSGSS activities: it's monthly newsletter, outreach brochures, postage, family information packets and the help-line phone. ADSGSS, Inc. is a non-profit educational corporation that depends solely on public donations.

Reservations for this event, that benefits this meaningful cause must be made in advance. Tables may be arranged to accommodate four, five or eight people together at $65 per person. Please call JoAnn Mitchell at 781-749-5417, evenings, for reservations.

Author to sign book on fishing

Buttonwood Books and Toys will host Cohasset author, Susan R. Playfair, on Sunday, May 18, at 2 p.m. for her book, "Vanishing Species: Saving the Fish, Sacrificing the Fisherman " at Buttonwood in Cohasset. "Vanishing Species" is a narrative about ground fishing in New England waters over a five-year period when both the fish and the fisherman are threaten with extinction. It is also the story of the people who are laboring to save the fisherman. It is story to be read by anyone who likes to eat fresh fish and anyone who loves coastal communities.

Playfair grew up digging clams and sailing in Duxbury and has cruised the New England waters since she was a young girl. She wrote "Vanishing Species" in an effort protect the coastal communities she loves. This is a free event and the public is most welcome. Please call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

Dog Obedience

The Cohasset Recreation Department will continuously, throughout the summer, offer dog obedience classes taught by Happy Dog Training School.

Second session classes will be held on Monday evenings on the Town Common, Cohasset, starting Monday, April 28, for Obedience with Distractions at 7 p.m. and at 6 p.m. for beginners. For all classes the fee is $100 for the five-week, one hour per week program, Dog owners are required to have their dogs' shots/inoculations up to date.

To register for the next available session, call the Recreation office at 781-383-4109. A new session will begin approximately every five weeks. Classes are limited in size and participants will be accepted on a first call, first enrolled basis.

Luminarias available for the Relay For Life

The American Cancer Society's Relay For Life in Cohasset is a time to celebrate the lives of people touched by cancer. By purchasing luminarias to honor cancer survivors or to remember loved ones, area residents can pay tribute to them while creating a lighted path of hope to lead Relay walkers through the night.

A Luminaria Ceremony will take place at 9p.m. on Friday, May 16 at Cohasset High School. Luminarias for the ceremony can be purchased for a minimum contribution of $5. Local residents need not be on a relay team to purchase a luminaria or to attend the ceremony. To purchase a luminaria, please call Jacqui Vitello at 781-383-2668. Luminarias may also be purchased during regular business hours at Pilgrim Co-operative Bank of Cohasset, 48 South Main Street; at Sovereign Bank, 380 Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Route 3A), Cohasset, or at the Relay For Life on May 16.

Proud corporate partners of this year's event include Pilgrim Co-operative Bank. The Cohasset Mariner is proud to be the 2003 media partner. For more information about Relay For Life or to find out how to volunteer, please contact the event chair Laurie Livingstone Greenip at 781-383-6193 or the American Cancer Society at 1-800-ACS-2345 or visit www.cancer.org.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Citizen power

Freedom and democracy are wonderful things and in a country like ours, because they are abundant even in small towns like Cohasset that has become a prime example of "citizen power."

Just for starters, two weeks ago at a School Committee meeting, a group of parents put to rest any talk of grade realignment before September '04 — even though the superintendent said renovations at the Deer Hill and the middle-high school would completed as early as January. The School Committee, which held firm on its decision to go forward with the grade 3 move to Deer Hill and grade 6 to the middle school, was no match for the parents on the subject of when. And that's as it should be, when arguments, as those the parents presented, are well reasoned and reasonable.

Cohasset Action, a group of citizens opposed to the AvalonBay project, may not succeed in stopping the 200-unit complex, but it won't be for lack of trying. We think, at times, the group has resorted to "scare tactics" to make its point, but if the members truly believe AvalonBay will destroy the town's character and severely stretch its resources, then who can blame them?

A group of middle-high school neighbors have organized to have the School Building Committee rethink the lighting plan at the school. Although the plans were drawn up some time ago, the neighbors have come forward in enough time so some changes can be made to keep the school safely lit, while not having "light pollution" hurt the quality of life in the residential area.

In another neighborhood, after two petitions and a handful of letters — residents resorted to filming a video to give the Health Board a clearer picture of an invasion of seagulls, which they say, a neighbor has welcomed by feeding them.

On the regional stage, Greenbush is another great example. Over the years the project has seen several pro- and anti-groups organize. Now GOT (Greenbush On Track) has emerged to provide counterpoints to AfTA (Advocates for Transportation Alternatives).

Over the years citizens groups have come and gone; some have succeeded in their mission, while others have failed. It's all part of having a stake in the place you call home and caring about what happens in your backyard. Here in Cohasset where citizens care immensely about their town , citizen power is not going to go away.

And that leaves officials with the often-unpopular and unenviable task of basing their decisions on what is the best, fair or within the bylaws rather than on who can yell the loudest.

Open burning harms environment

TO THE EDITOR:

I am disturbed to see in the Cohasset Mariner every week the notice announcing Open Burning Season. It distresses me that the Mariner is essentially promoting burning in this way. Burning brush is harmful to the atmosphere no matter when or how it is done. It adds carbon to the atmosphere, exacerbating global climate change. It adds particulate matter, increasing smog and aggravating the symptoms of those with respiratory disease. It adds to the air the precursors of acid rain. Oftentimes "brush" consists of the next generation of trees, and "clearing the brush" means destroying a generation of trees.

Burning "brush" does nothing good for the environment. (Oh, I suppose you could argue that it adds fertilizer to the soil in the form of ash, but so does arson.) Why does the Mariner wish to promote this?

Creating brush piles, on the other hand, does nothing harmful to the environment. Trees absorb and trap carbon dioxide in their life process. Brush piles keep the carbon trapped, preventing additional atmospheric carbon, thus counteracting global climate change. Brush piles provide habitat for wildlife. The National Wildlife Federation, which certifies backyards as wildlife habitats, strongly encourages brush piles. (www.nwf.org)

Won't you please stop running the "Open Burning Season" notice, and instead encourage your readers to stop this harmful practice? Tell them they will be helping Earth survive, rather than adding to the damage. Please. Maybe they'll enjoy the wrens and juncos that will love their brush pile.

HEALTH NOTES

How to prevent exposure to rabies

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Every spring we have to begin remembering some of the possible hazards towns like Cohasset face from those who share our considerable open space. This year, many Massachusetts residents, including many school-age children, are potentially exposed to rabies. Hundreds receive the series of post-exposure vaccinations following a bite, scratch, or other risky encounter with a wild animal or unvaccinated domestic animal. Many of these exposures, and the associated expensive treatment, could have been prevented by avoiding contact with potentially rabid animals. Some of these exposures occurred in schools, when bats and other mammals, dead and alive, were brought into classrooms by students and teachers!

Rabies is fatal in humans. It is transmitted by wild animals and unvaccinated pets, including stray cats and dogs. In 2002 more than 300 animals, including bats, skunks, raccoons, cats, dogs, and other animals, tested positive for rabies at the State Laboratory Institute.

• How can I protect my pet from rabies?

First, keep rabies vaccinations up-to-date for your cats, ferrets, and dogs. Second, control your pets by keeping cats and ferrets indoors and keeping dogs under direct supervision. Although the majority of rabies cases occur in wildlife, most humans are given rabies vaccine as a result of exposure to domestic animals. Your pets and other domestic animals can be infected when they are bitten by rabid wild animals. Pets are therefore vaccinated by your veterinarian to prevent them from acquiring the disease from wildlife, and transmitting it to humans

• What happens if a neighborhood cat bites me?

You should seek medical evaluation for any animal bite. However, rabies is uncommon in dogs, cats, and ferrets in the United States. Generally no anti-rabies prophylaxis is needed.

• How do people get rabies?

People usually get rabies from the bite of a rabid animal. It is also possible, but quite rare, that people may get rabies if infectious material from a rabid animal, such as saliva, gets directly into their eyes, nose, mouth, or a wound.

• How soon after an exposure should I seek medical attention?

Medical assistance should be obtained as soon as possible after an exposure.

• What medical attention do I need if I am exposed to rabies?

One of the most effective methods to decrease the chances for infection involves thorough washing of the wound with soap and water. Specific medical attention for someone exposed to rabies consists of a regimen doses of immune globulin and vaccine over a 28-day period. by your health care provider as soon as possible after exposure. Current vaccines are relatively painless and are given in your arm, like a flu or tetanus vaccine.

• What animals get rabies?

Any mammal can get rabies. The most common wild reservoirs of rabies are raccoons, skunks, bats, foxes, and coyotes. Domestic mammals can also get rabies. Cats, cattle, and dogs are the most frequently reported rabid domestic animals in the United States.

• What is the risk of rabies from squirrels, mice, rats, and other rodents?

Small rodents (such as squirrels, rats, mice, hamsters, guinea pigs, gerbils, and chipmunks,) and lagomorphs (such as rabbits and hares) are almost never found to be infected with rabies and have not been known to cause rabies among humans in the United States. Bites by these animals are usually not considered a risk of rabies unless the animal was sick or behaving in any unusual manner and rabies is widespread in your area.

• Do bats get rabies?

Yes. Bats are mammals and are susceptible to rabies, but most do not have the disease. You cannot tell if a bat has rabies just by looking at it; rabies can be confirmed only by having the animal tested in a laboratory. To minimize the risk for rabies, it is best never to handle any bat.

• What should I do if I come in contact with a bat?

If you are bitten by a bat — or if infectious material (such as saliva) from a bat gets into your eyes, nose, mouth, or a wound —wash the affected area thoroughly and get medical attention immediately. Whenever possible, the bat should be captured and sent to a laboratory for.rabies testing.

• Should I be concerned about rabies when I travel outside the United States?

Yes. Rabies and the rabies-like viruses can occur in animals anywhere in the world. In most countries, the risk of rabies in an encounter with an animal and the precautions necessary to prevent rabies are the same as they are in the United States. When traveling, it is always prudent to avoid approaching any wild or domestic animal.

The developing countries in Africa, Asia, and Latin America have additional problems in that dog rabies is common there and preventive treatment for human rabies may be difficult to obtain. The importance of rabid dogs in these countries, where tens of thousands of people die of the disease each year, cannot be overstated. Unlike programs in developed countries, dog rabies vaccination programs in developing countries have not always been successful. Rates of post-exposure prophylaxis in some developing countries are about 10 times higher than in the United States, and rates of human rabies are sometimes 100 times higher. Before traveling abroad, consult a health care provider, travel clinic, or health department about your risk of exposure to rabies and how to handle an exposure should it arise.

Most of this information comes from the Center for Disease Control. If you have questions about rabies, call the Board of Health, 781-383-4116.

Earth friendly living is possible

NATURAL VIEW

JIM SHIPSKY

Add sustainability to your vocabulary

If a population can keep on living its current lifestyle for thousands upon thousands of generations, because it follows nature's laws of growth and re-growth, that population is sustainable.

There is an interesting story in Tom Wessel's "Reading the Forested Landscape." In the early 1800s the finest wool cloth was woven from the fleece of Merino sheep. At that time Merino sheep resided nowhere but Portugal. The sheep were not stay-at-home isolationists by choice. The Portuguese cornered the upscale wool market by imposing a strict embargo on the export of Merino sheep. The punishment for attempting to smuggle breedable sheep out of Portugal was death. But when Napoleon conquered Portugal in 1809, the embargo was lifted and Merino sheep were imported to Massachusetts. So high were the profits available that nearly all of Cohasset's forests were cut down to make sheep pastures. The numerous stone "walls" meandering through many Cohasset woodlands are actually sheep fences dating from this period.

Cohasset soil generally consists of a thin layer of organic topsoil on top of bedrock or glacial sand, gravel, or clay. Without ongoing replenishment, the soil soon becomes depleted. By 1840 the sheep pastures were abandoned and were quickly colonized by a succession of plant communities. Eventually second-growth woodlands developed where sheep once grazed. Wildlife found suitable habitat and flourished. Wompatuck State Park, Whitney & Thayer Woods, Wheelwright Park, and similar wooded areas are examples. The land in Cohasset recovered from vast over-development, because the nature of the development allowed nature to heal herself.

While the forests quietly recreated themselves, Cohasset's population grew steadily and another wave of development took place, far less benign than sheep farming. The second-growth forests began to be cut down and replaced with buildings, streets, driveways, sidewalks, parking lots, lawns, non-native plants, and so forth. At first there was plenty of open space left over. There didn't seem to be any need to wonder if someday a threshold would be reached, when no more land should be developed in this new way. When further development would threaten the continuation of human life by damaging Earth so as to render it hostile to human life.

What would such a threshold look like? How would you know when you were approaching it or had crossed it? The answer lies in the word sustainability. The way I look at it, if a population can keep on living its current lifestyle for thousands upon thousands of generations, because it follows nature's laws of growth and re-growth, that population is sustainable.

When Cohasset transportation switched from horse-drawn carriages to internal-combustion engines, the threshold was crossed. Horses are fueled by hay, a renewable resource. Their waste product is fertilizer, useful in growing more hay. A sustainable system. Cars, on the other hand, burn petroleum, a non-renewable fuel, and as a waste product give off atmospheric pollution. Not sustainable. Besides limited fuel, there aren't enough raw materials on Earth to make a car for everybody. A lifestyle requiring the use of cars is not sustainable.

Cohasset consists almost exclusively of suburban sprawl. The average Cohasset household includes three cars. Not sustainable. Most Cohasset homes are heated with some form of fossil fuel. Not sustainable. The electricity Cohasset consumes is generated from fossil and nuclear fuels. Not sustainable. Suburban sprawl development is not sustainable. In case you're curious, I live in a suburban sprawl home, heated with fossil fuels, wood, and sunshine, and own two cars. I look forward to making my lifestyle sustainable.

Could some sort of miracle make Cohasset sustainable? Sure. If one of the entrepreneurs trying to duplicate how UFOs generate power succeeds in inventing perpetual zero-emission power, we're all set. If someone invents vehicles built of perpetually sustainable materials and run on renewable energy, maybe we can all keep driving all over Cohasset.

But Cohasset doesn't need a miracle, just sustainable planning. When homes are located where residents can walk to everything they need each day, that's sustainable. When public transit running on renewable energy is within walking distance, that's sustainable. When the electric power companies switch to renewable sources like wind, sun, and tides, that's sustainable. When homes are heated with passive and active solar methods, that's sustainable.

I can envision myself living in a sustainable Cohasset neighborhood. I'd have a penthouse studio filled with sunlight, heated with passive solar. I'd have photovoltaic panels on the roof generating electricity. Plants inside would connect with plants outside on a sunny natural terrace where I could relax. The plants would be part of an in-town natural ecosystem providing habitat for wildlife. I'd walk or bike to French Memories, to friends' homes, to the harbor. I'd walk to quiet, non-polluting rapid transit to get to Boston. (See www.carfree.com for gorgeous photos of car free life.)

These are reachable goals. But they are not reachable if Cohasset continues building suburban sprawl. The biggest obstacle to creative change is denial. Many people I speak with in Cohasset are in denial about what is happening to Earth, both globally and right here where we live. I don't blame them. If there are no known alternatives or options to frightening information, a sane mind tends to repress the knowledge, or go into denial about it. If you're convinced you're helpless to do anything about the situation, why even think about it? There are lots of reasons for wanting to deny the pain associated with frightening information about the environment.

What we can do

One of my readers (thank you, Sarah) suggested I should always include information about what Cohasset residents can do.

Change your self. Abandon denial, allow yourself to feel the pain, and open yourself to the joy of a sustainable future. The book "Coming Back To Life" by Joanna Macy and Molly Young Brown is a good place to start. Chapter 2 describes repression of knowledge and feelings associated with environmental damage; Chapter 3 teaches personal empowerment. Of course, just reading the book is not enough. Taking a workshop with Joanna goes beyond the intellectual to emotional and spiritual levels. For information on workshops see www.joannamacy.net, or 2812 Cherry St., Berkeley, CA 94705

Change your lifestyle. There are stopgap measures you can take to greatly increase the energy efficiency, thereby decreasing the environmental damage, caused by heating and cooling your home, consuming electricity, and driving your cars. Take these steps. But they are only holding actions. Since the suburban lifestyle depends on cheap oil, it simply is not sustainable. Explore and discover what a long-range sustainable lifestyle might look like. Have some fun with it.

Discover how to connect with nature. Nature has the answers to your questions about how to live sustainably. Discover the wonderful feeling of "coming home" to the nature your ancestors once knew.

Speak out against building new suburban sprawl of any type. Attend a meeting of the Growth & Development Committee, which is preparing a Master Plan for Cohasset's future. Ask the committee if they are planning for sustainability, or for more suburban sprawl. (Thanks to the Open Meeting Law, all town committee meetings are open to the public.)

Attend a meeting of the Open Space Committee, which is supposed to be protecting open space in Cohasset. Ask the committee how their Open Space Plan will guide Cohasset toward a sustainable future.

Speak out against destroying any more natural ecosystems in Cohasset. Oppose the destruction of the Town-owned woodland where a senior housing project is proposed. Attend a meeting of the Senior Housing Committee and ask them to build a sustainable community on already-disturbed land.

Explore possibilities for sustainable lifestyles. Some town officials persist in voicing the idea that the only alternative to suburban sprawl is a stereotype image of an ugly part of an ugly high-rise city, with "people living on top of each other." Become acquainted with some of the sustainable Scandinavian and European towns. Lund, Sweden has already exceeded the requirements of the Kyoto Accords. Five towns along the Ligurian Sea in Italy, known as the Cinque Terra, are so beautiful they have become tourist destinations. Travel and experience for yourself how wonderful sustainability can be.

Burk no match for the Masters

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

When Edward Whymper, the first man to climb the Matterhorn in the Swiss Alps, was asked why he climbed mountains, he is said to have replied simply, "Because they're there!"

Personally, I think that's why Martha Burk, the head of the National Council of Women's Organizations, is in such an uproar over the Augusta National Golf Club's refusal to admit women as members.

I can't for the life of me figure out why else a woman would want to pay a fee estimated between $30,000 and $50,000 to tee off, drink sherry and play dominoes with men whose average age is 71 and climbing.

If you've been able to read beyond the war pages in your local newspaper in recent weeks, you'll recall that Martha was at the Masters' Golf Tournament in Augusta the other day, directing a protest against the club's all-male policy.

One newspaper headlined the club recruitment policy: "You don't apply, you get called."

Unfortunately, she was up against a sly old fossil named "Hootie" Johnson, the chairman of Augusta National, who had enough pull with local law to have Martha and her protesters restricted to a place where they couldn't be seen without binoculars.

When Martha and her gang threatened to take the fight to the corporate suits who sponsor the telecast of the Masters' Tournament, Hootie countered by sending the sponsors home for their own good and financing the telecast out of club coffers.

Not inconsiderable coffers, I may add, since $35,000 to $50,000 each from 300 members adds up to . . . I've never been called on to count that high. One newspaper headlined the club recruitment policy: "You don't apply, you get called."

As you may have guessed, Augusta National is not your average, run-of-the-mill country club.

The membership is limited to 300, all male. Members hail from all over the country, including two from Massachusetts. There are also members from Canada, Europe and South Africa, although they may not make all the meetings.

The membership rolls were a closely guarded secret — until somebody ratted out the list to USA Today.

As near as I can make out, the oldest member is 97-year-old Ben Gilmer, a retired AT & T executive. The youngest is Jefferson Knox, who is probably young enough at 39 to be sent out on coffee runs for his senior companions.

The only members from Massachusetts are Frederick Moseley III of Seaward Management and Robert O'Black of McKinsey & Company. I was disappointed in not finding Simon Fireman, Tom Flatley and Whitey Bulger on the list.

Stephen D. Bechtel and his son, Riley, are members if you are wondering where the Big Dig overruns went. So is George Schultz, the old secretary of state, and Arnie Palmer, the retired golf professional, and Tom Murphy, who used to own the Mariner Newspapers as the head of Capital Cities/ABC.

Me? I've never been called. And if I were, I think I'd decline. As Groucho Marx once said, "I don't want to belong to any club that would have me as a member." Then there's that $30,000 to $50,000, too!

Birds and war - heroes, victims, and symbols of peace

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

War brings death and injury to humans, both military and civilian. War causes bird casualties, too. We see pictures on television of destroyed buildings and infrastructure. Less often do we see reports about the wildlife habitat being destroyed. Billowing smoke from bombing and fire spews toxins that not only pollute the air humans breathe, but also harms birds. Smoke and sandstorms interfere with visibility for soldiers, but also disorient migrating birds. Oil spills contaminate ground water for people, but also suffocate birds and turn wetlands into "lakes" of oil.

Good communication systems are essential in war. In this age of ubiquitous cell phones, satellites, two-way radios etc., it is easy to forget that instant communication was not always available. Even before World War I began, German spies set up pigeon lofts in England to be used for sending secret messages once the war started. Other countries used military pigeons as well, with an estimated 20,000 birds dying in that war. During World War II, more than 200,000 pigeons joined the National Pigeon Service in Britain. They carried messages, parachuted out of planes with the Royal Air Force, and took photographs with cameras strapped to their bodies. The People's Dispensary for Sick Animals, a British veterinary charity, awarded the Dickin Medal for outstanding service to at least 30 of these pigeons. Many soldiers credit these birds with saving their lives.

The use of pigeons as messengers is not a new idea. Even before 3000 BC, the Egyptians used pigeons as messengers. In ancient Greece, homing pigeons were used to spread the word to towns around the country about who had won the Olympic Games. The Roman Emperor Nero also used homing pigeons to report results of sport events to his friends and family.

Today in Iraq, help from birds is not needed for communication, but birds are still part of tne military scene. As we know, coal miners used to take canaries down into the mines to alert them to unsafe air. Because of concern that chemical or biological weapons might be used in Iraq, 43 chickens were given to the Marines of the 7th Regiment to be their early warning system. If the chickens began to look sick, the reasoning went, the Marines would immediately don their gas masks. Instead desert heat killed all the chickens within a week. 175 pigeons, more tolerant of desert conditions, then replaced the chickens as supplements to modern mechanical sensors that cost $12,000 apiece. Birds cost $60 apiece.

COURTESY OF UNEP (UNITED NATIONS ENVIRONMENT PROGRAMME)

A UNEP study revealed that by spring 2000, a 1,000 square kilometer vestige straddling the Iran-Iraq border was all that was left of the Mesopotamian marshlands that are an integral part of the Tigris-Euphrates river basin. The extensive wetlands complex originally covered an area of 15,000-20,000 square kilometers.

How does the timing of military operations in Iraq affect bird migrations? Mid-March to late April is prime time for some birds to migrate across Iraq from their wintering grounds in Africa to breeding grounds in Europe and western Russia. The route is too long for birds to fly nonstop, but a battleground is not an appealing place to stop to rest.

Bird biodiversity

According to Phil Hockey, a migration specialist from Cape Town, "Southern Iraq has been identified as a globally important hot spot for bird biodiversity, one of only three in the Middle East. The marshes there are among the most important wintering grounds for water birds in western Eurasia." The Mesopotamian Marshes, sometimes referred to as the Garden of Eden, once were an area twice the size of the Florida Everglades. After the Gulf War, Saddam Hussein began draining the marshes by constructing diversion canals, ostensibly to create agricultural land.

Evidence shows that his true aim was to drive out the Ma'dan, or Marsh Arabs, an ancient Babylonian people who lived among the marsh reeds. Adding to the problem of water diversion, Iran, Iraq, Turkey and Syria have built over 30 dams upstream, thus decreasing the water flowing through the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers by 20 percent. Annual spring flooding of these rivers that is needed to keep the marshes alive and healthy has been eliminated. The marshes are now only about a tenth of their former size. Working with the UNEP (United Nations Environmental Program) and with exiled Ma'dan leaders, an Iraqi engineer named Azzam Alwash is helping to set up a marsh rehabilitation project called Eden Again sponsored by the Iraq Foundation. This won't be easy, but with enough international and political pressure, plus support from a new Iraqi government, perhaps his dream will come true.

In 1953, North Korea and South Korea were separated by a demilitarized zone (DMZ). This narrow strip of land crosses155 miles of peninsula between the Sea of Japan and the Yellow Sea. The DMZ has essentially been closed to humans ever since the end of the war. Left alone, there has been a remarkable recovery of rare and endangered plant and animal species. The DMZ acts as a safe haven for migratory birds. Ironically the easing of tensions between North and South Korea means that roads and railroads may soon be built in the area, causing much environmental destruction. Ke Chung Kim and Edward O. Wilson write, "It may seem a forlorn hope that an insular nation with a habit of threatening its neighbors with nuclear weapons would cooperate with the international community (and its enemy of 50 years) to preserve nature. But the benefits are great, the costs small and the contribution to our planet invaluable." ("New York Times", December 10, 2002)

A traditional symbol of peace has been a white dove. The ornithological name for pigeon is Rock Dove. Perhaps our Marines, when they no longer need the pigeons, will release these different but closely related doves as a symbol of peace.

Joanne Norton is Master Bander for the New England Wildlife Center, and counts birds for Project FeederWatch, WetlandWatchers and International Shorebird Surveys.

Geologist talks at annual society dinner

Speaker will be geologist, Peter Dillon, addressing "The Geologic History of Cohasset: The Really Early Years."

The Cohasset Historical Society will hold its spring dinner on Sunday, April 27 at the Cohasset Harbor Inn, 124 Elm St. from 5:30 to 9:30 p.m. The featured speaker will be geologist Peter Dillon addressing "The Geologic History of Cohasset: The Really Early Years."

Dillon received his Master's degree from Boston College and worked for a number of years for the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection as a hydrogeologist before becoming a consultant on water supply and wastewater issues. Cost of the dinner and presentation is $30 for historical society members and $35 for non-members. A cash bar will be available. Anyone interested in attending may send their check to Cohasset Historical Society, 14 Summer St., Cohasset, MA 02025. (781-383-1434). Please include your name and address as well as your choice of entrée. (Baked cod with buttery topping or chicken francais in white wine and lemon sauce with herbs and capers.) All are welcome to attend this fun and informative evening.

Romney battles Legislature in war to win public opinion

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

As the House responds to the governor's budget, there's a lot more at stake than numbers. Or is that a lot less?

There's certainly no question the numbers are important. But it was also very much about who wins the battle of public opinion – who is seen as credible, compassionate, competent.

A scathing letter from Rep. John Rogers, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee told his colleagues the governor's budget, and its accompanying proposals for extensive restructuring of the government, is a sham to an alarming degree. "The Administration's unrealistic or questionable revenue estimates and overstated savings amounts to almost $1 billion," Rogers wrote — and he warned the members that's how much the House budget proposal is going to cut, over and above Romney's plan. Local aid is going to be a prime target.

Responding, Romney got as surly as he's been since taking office. "What I'm fearful of is that House leadership wants to keep things the way they are, doesn't want to see change, wants the status quo," the governor said.

The honeymoon, though that's a political word, appears to be over. And as usual the interpretation of the word is different inside and outside the building. Inside, the honeymoon ended as soon as Romney indicated his unwillingness to bend on taxes, meaning if the Democratic Legislature wanted to approve new tax revenues, he wasn't going to share the heat.

Outside, though, the governor is still a fresh face, and most people want his ideas given a try. That's why he was able to say: "the voters have made it clear they want change, they want reform, and nothing else is going to be satisfactory."

It's also why, though Rogers announced the House is going to adopt some of Romney's changes – at least, the generally praised restructuring of the human services bureaucracy and the elimination of the Metropolitan District Commission.

In the end, Romney can win the argument about reform – outside, not inside, the building – by saying the Legislature might be right that the savings estimates are too high, but that reform is worth doing anyway and the governor is willing to make additional cuts in spending if the savings from reform don't amount to what he projects. It makes a good bumper sticker: "Try Reform First."

The cuts in local aid set up a difficult dynamic within the House and Senate. State-local relations are always wary. This is only partly about policy. Some of the local leaders — mayors and selectmen — don't like their reps and senators personally, and some of them want their legislator's job. In other cases, the rep or senator wants to be mayor. Combine that with the power the legislators have over the locals' budgets, and the political power the locals have over the legislators' reputation back in the district, and the conversations about local aid get – tense. It's only going to get tenser.

As the budget debate got fiercer, the crosshairs swung toward the sacred cows.

• Abolition in the air: O'Leary calls for end to Quinn bill . . . Sen. Robert O'Leary, D-Falmouth, said the law paying police extra to earn college degrees should be ended. Instead, he said, local departments should require anyone applying to be an officer should have a degree already. Officers now on the force would still enjoy the benefits of the so-called "Quinn Bill," which O'Leary said costs $100 million a year.

• . . . While Joyce and Finegold say time has come for council to go, Sen. Brian Joyce, D-Milton, Sen. Robert Hedlund, D-Weymouth, and Rep. Barry Finegold, D-Andover, said the Senate should select judges, not the Governor's Council. The Council is often criticized as too politically wired and duplicative. But periodic proposals to abolish always run into the same question: would the alternative really be better? The proposal announced require a constitutional amendment necessitating the votes of two successive Legislatures and a vote of the people.

• Pro mutual announces 20 percent hike in malpractice insurance — The growing sense of crisis about malpractice costs, which have caused serious disruptions in other states, got much greater here. Pro Mutual Group, the largest malpractice insurer in Massachusetts, announced a 20 percent increase in rates. That caused the doctors' lobby to repeat its warning many doctors will soon start dropping specialties or stop practicing altogether.

• Nine-month delay possible on dig if contractor goes under — The Inspector General of the U.S. Transportation Dept. issued a report stating it will require Massachusetts to fully disclose to bond buyers the possibility of the insolvency of one of the Big Dig's largest contractor. The state warned investors in February a "major contractor" might go out of business; Modern Continental Construction was quickly identified as the business in question. Company officials have expressed confidence in their fiscal situation. The federal officials said a bankruptcy by the reportedly troubled firm could delay the opening of the southbound lanes of I-93 by nine months, possibly affecting plans for the 2004 Democratic National Convention.

• House makes it easier to raise pay of its leaders — The House voted overwhelmingly to approve Speaker Thomas Finneran's bill that would let the Legislature set salaries of committee chairs and other leadership internally, without legislation requiring the governor's signature. The Senate is said to be ready to follow suit. The Romney administration at first appeared okay with the legislation, but Romney sounded carefully neutral after the House vote.

• Slot machines rejected by house — No one was shocked that the vote against slots at racetracks, and two off-track locations, went Finneran's way. Several House members predicted the Senate will embrace slot machine legislation and add as much as $500 million in related revenues to its budget. If that occurs, it would set up a major budgetary disagreement between the branches.

• Romney drops plan to tax used cars on book value — The governor's press office at first denied a proposal was being considered to base sales taxes on used cars on the vehicles' retail value, instead of the current practice of using the lower trade-in value. But when the Boston Herald showed Romney spokeswoman Shawn Fedderman a Registry of Motor Vehicles memo detailing the plan, she told the paper: "We have abandoned the plan. Frankly, it looks like a tax increase."

Local legislators want door closed on 40B housing law

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D- Hingham, state Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R- Weymouth, and state Rep. Frank M. Hynes, D-Marshfield, testified at the Governors 40B Task Force meeting on Monday April 14 where they expressed their concerns relative to the adverse impact of Chapter 40B on South Shore communities.

"It was a great opportunity to testify in front of the task force to express my concerns as well as the concerns of the people and the communities in my district" said Bradley. "I indicated that significant change is needed and it must be done through legislation rather than regulation. I also indicated that some level of local control must be returned to communities."

"I was pleased to be able to be joined with my colleagues in order to provide a strong voice calling for change to Chapter 40B," said Hedlund. "I will be eagerly awaiting the recommendations of the task force in order to see what action is taken to remedy the concerns we raised."

Hynes stated, "Chapter 40B doesn't work. It's broken. Communities want to encourage affordable housing for families but 40B ties their hands and disallows any balance for the traditional interests and character of the community. Give communities the tools, such as inclusionary and mixed use zoning, to encourage affordable housing with local control."

The Governor established a task force to review changes to Chapter 40B. The Task Force is due to report back by June 1, 2003.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

By Bob Katzen
beaconhill@aol.com
April 14 - 18, 2003

Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) (617) 722-1646 Room 413F

Representative Garrett J. Bradley (D-Hingham) (617) 722-2120 Room 472

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on four roll calls from the week of April 14-18. There were no roll calls in the Senate last week.

HOUSE LEADERSHIP JOBS AND SALARIES (H 3743) House 100-50, gave near final approval to and sent to the Senate a bill allowing the House and Senate, through their operating rules, to unilaterally set the bonus pay, above the $53,381 base salary, of their committee chairs and other majority and minority members in leadership positions. Under current law, any bonus pay must be proposed in a piece of legislation that requires legislative approval and then goes to the governor who can sign it or veto it. Supporters said this is a simple piece of housekeeping legislation that would allow the House and Senate to manage their own in-house affairs without interference from the executive branch. They noted the governor's office has always been able to set the salaries of its staff without legislative interference. Some argued that this would allow the House to fairly give bonus pay for chairs of new committees proposed by Speaker Finneran, including a Medicaid Committee and Homeland Security Committee. Opponents said the bill would destroy the system of checks and balances by giving the speaker and the Legislature the power to quickly increase the pay of favored legislators under the radar screen of the public. They argued the bill is poorly timed in light of the unemployment problem, the state's deficit and the billions of dollars in pending budget cuts in many important programs. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill allowing the Legislature to unilaterally set bonus pay. A "Nay" vote is against the bill). — N

POSTPONE CONSIDERATION OF SLOT MACHINE LEGISLATION (H 2792) House 28-122, rejected a motion to postpone consideration of a bill allowing 9000 slot machines in the state. The motion would delay action until April 23-- the day the House Ways and Means version of the fiscal 2004 state budget is scheduled for release. Postponement supporters said the delay would simply allow members to properly consider the potential in state revenue from slot machines in the context of the state budget and all the drastic cuts it is likely to include. Postponement opponents said slot machines are not a new issue and argued the House is ready to debate the merits of the proposal now. They argued it is clear there will be budget cuts and members can vote now on whether they believe that any revenue raised from slot machines outweighs the other problems the machines will create. (A "Yea" vote is for postponing consideration of the bill until April 23. A "Nay" vote is against postponement). — N

SLOT MACHINES AT SIX LOCATIONS (number not yet available) House 59-95, rejected a bill allowing 1500 slot machines at each of the state's four racetracks and at two other venues in central and western Massachusetts. Fifty percent of revenues from the profits from each machine would go to the state with 25 percent of that earmarked for local aid while 46.4 percent would go to the owners of the facilities. The remaining 3.6 percent would go to the host community, contiguous communities, law enforcement and an effort to help compulsive gamblers. Another key provision creates a formula that requires each facility to compensate the state for any shortfall in State Lottery growth. Supporters said the state's annual share of the slot machine revenue is estimated at $300 million to $500 million in much needed dollars that would prevent some deep budget cuts in local aid, education and human services. They noted that allowing the machines will create many new jobs and argued it is time to allow these facilities so that adult citizens can have the opportunity to play the slots in Massachusetts instead of supporting slot machines and casinos in Connecticut. Opponents said legalizing slots would open a legal route that would eventually lead to recognized Indian tribes being allowed to open casinos in Massachusetts. They argued that the projected revenue estimates are excessive and do not take into account increased financial and social costs from public safety problems, increased traffic, compulsive gambling and loss in State Lottery revenues. Some asked why the racetracks rather than other businesses should get the slot machines. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill allowing the 9000 slot machines. A "Nay" vote is against it). — Y

SLOT MACHINES AT FOUR LOCATIONS (H 3153) House 65-87 rejected a bill allowing 1500 slot machines at each of the state's four racetracks. Fifty-one percent of revenues from the profits from each machine would go to the state with 25 percent of that earmarked for local aid while 41.65 percent would go to the owners of the facilities. The remaining 7.35 percent would go to the host community, contiguous communities, an effort to help compulsive gamblers and to the racetracks' "purses"-- money which goes to jockeys, horse breeders and horse farms. Many of the arguments for and against this bill mirrored the ones used in debate on the prior roll call on allowing slots at six locations. Supporters added that without the slot machines, the racetracks will likely close resulting in the loss of thousands of jobs and millions in racing tax revenue for the state. Opponents added that the state has passed numerous laws to help the racetracks remain viable and said that handing them licenses for slot machines just goes too far. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill allowing the 6000 slot machines. A "Nay" vote is against it). — Y

Army Corps should not permit Greenbush

To the Editor:

Carol Britton Meyer's April 17 article, "300 turn out at rail hearings" was a balanced and thoughtfully written account of the Army Corps of Engineers hearing held in Hingham on April 15.

One can only hope the Corps representatives will factor the very real concerns of the many residents who are impacted by the project into its deliberations over whether to issue permits to the MBTA.

If the Corps has any doubts about the extent of this opposition, it need look no further than town meeting votes in which the majority of citizens in Scituate and Hingham have overwhelmingly rejected Greenbush, with Cohasset at about 50 percent.

It is also noteworthy that agencies of the federal government (hopefully the Army Corps is among them) seem to do a far better job of looking out for the health and well being of the ordinary citizen than our own state agencies.

For example:

• The federal EPA issued a report in 1998 pointing to the harmful effects of diesel locomotive emissions, which are even more carcinogenic than regular diesel emissions because of their extremely small particle size. In addition, the Bush administration just released similar data in an attempt to clean up the air we breathe. In the face of all this evidence, the MBTA claims diesel emissions are harmless.

• The federal government is literally paying the railroad industry to remove at-grade crossings nationwide because they are unsafe. The pre-mitigation MBTA plan for Greenbush had the highest concentration of at-grade crossings of any rail project in the nation.

• Years ago the Federal Transit Administration expressed concern that Greenbush would not survive the so-called 4F review process in which an agency must prove there are no alternatives that are less environmentally invasive. The MBTA's response was to embark on the Greenbush restoration without federal funding and thus avoid much tougher federal oversight in exploring alternatives.

• While the federal EPA continues to strengthen our environmental laws, state transportation authorities treat environmental laws as obstacles to be overcome rather than as laws that were intended to protect the environment and our health and well being. In this context, the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act (MEPA) has been severely politicized and compromised, when in fact it was designed to address the very issues Greenbush opponents are concerned about.

• The State Historic Preservation Officer, whose mandate is to protect the state's historic districts, has refused to challenge a heavy diesel locomotive bisecting The Lincoln National Register Historic District, one of the nation's historic treasures, as well as 21 other negatively impacted historic districts in the Greenbush corridor.

• And the conservation commissions of the towns affected by Greenbush are unable to do their jobs because of the state-imposed design/build concept on a project that design/build was never intended for.

In its hearing invitation the Corps stated that its oversight includes considerations for ordinary citizens: "all things having to do with the health and welfare of the people." One hopes the Corps will act on this commitment and insist on a full environmental review of the project before permits are granted. Once back under the federal umbrella there is every reason to believe that Greenbush will fail even the simplest of environmental reviews and that the alternatives will at long last be seriously considered.

Getting train facts straight

To the Editor:

For too long, opponents of restoring the Greenbush commuter rail line have shouted down those who hope to see the train run again someday along the South Shore. But now their rhetoric has become so ridiculous they are having a hard time keeping their facts and their faces straight when they make their arguments.

One opponent, speaking at the Army Corps of Engineers hearing in Hingham last week, referred to a Greenbush train as a "weapon of mass destruction." These inflammatory words are not only inaccurate; they also make light of the severity of real weapons of mass destruction.

Another opponent, Rep. Garrett Bradley, speaking at the hearing said it should not be built in part because it would cost $275,000 per new rider. To call this a half-truth is too kind. He assumes each new rider will only take the train once in their lives. In reality, the Federal Transit Administration's cost-effectiveness criteria considers the economic life of the project, operating costs and a credit for travel time savings. Using this objective criteria, Greenbush costs about $15 per new transit trip. Rep. Bradley's math would make each road repaving job enormously expensive since it would presume that only cars using the road on the first day should be counted to determine the per car cost of the project. Or a new school, where he would count only the children entering on opening day. That seems silly, doesn't it?

Certainly capable minds are able to disagree on policy points. But instead of offering factual counter-arguments and viable alternatives, Greenbush opponents have resorted to manipulating numbers and launching outrageous invectives. That is both unfair and unfortunate.

Support Greenbush

To the Editor:

Mr. Ted Lento,
U.S. Army Corps of Engineers

I attended a part of the hearing in Hingham, held to receive comments on the project and want to register my enthusiastic support for restoration of the Greenbush line of the former Old Colony Railroad.

I own a considerable stretch of property along the railroad in Cohasset, between Beechwood Street and the Scituate line, and though some might think this would be unfavorably affected, I believe the value of the rail service outweighs any such adverse effect, which I think has been greatly exaggerated by opponents.

I believe the Corps of Engineers and others have done a very thorough job of researching the environmental effects—as documented in the voluminous charts handed out—and seem to have taken extensive measures to mitigate these. Furthermore, it is hard for me to believe that the restored line will have more than a fraction of the effect of the old double-track line which operated more than 100 years with an apparent minimum of damage. At least the adjoining lands seems to have survived the passage of massive and frequent steam locomotives remarkably well.

I can sympathize with some of the recommendations for quad gates at certain crossings and have confidence that the MTA will compromise in some measure. But safety was adequately dealt with in past operations and I believe it will become a way of life in the future.

Commuter rail service will be a great plus for this area, as it has been everywhere else. Can you imagine that areas now safely and efficiently-served would consider for a moment abolishing it?

Over-building is a concern

To the Editor:

My wife and I moved to Cohasset about six years ago. She had grown up in Cohasset while I was a newcomer. Together we represented the old and new views of the town. I am also a retired architect by profession, which colors my views.

Cohasset is a very beautiful and unique town. In my opinion, the most significant reason for that is it maintains a very delicate balance between a natural environment and a man-made environment. That kind of balance can be easily destroyed by over-building which we are now seeing some examples of. This could be controlled by a FAR (Floor-Area-Ratio) where the allowable, buildable area on a site would be given multiple of the area of the site.

Another example of the uniqueness is that it is the outgrowth of a colonial town and has a magnificent commercial and intimate village center and commons. The town was founded on the principle of people walking, and not the automobile. While some are concerned with providing more commercial parking, I am not. When I drive to the village center, I always find a parking space. When it is crowded, I may have to circle the center one or more times, but that is a small price to pay for the proximity. I can conduct my business there in minimal time and not have the problem I would have going to a mall. I would like to see the pedestrian character remain and contiguous multiple parking spaces are the biggest threat to that.

Another feature is the ledge and I would like to see most of that remain for the sake of aesthetics and its uniqueness.

Another asset in this town is that it fronts the ocean. That asset it shares with many other places but the ocean, in conjunction with the already-mentioned features above, make it more unique.

As you drive about Cohasset enjoying the ocean, Little Harbor, inland waters, topography, ledge, wooded lands and village center, please ask yourself if you too want to see its character remain, and if so, how to achieve that. It is fragile and can by easily destroyed. Please do not take it for granted.

Silent auction sponsors thanked

To the Editor:

CMI's recent Spring Launch Fundraiser was especially successful socially and financially. More than 100 people came together at the Cohasset Lightkeeper's House to have a great time and raise funds to support community rowing and maritime education. The proceeds from the event will go a long way in supporting our 10th year on Cohasset Harbor.

Even in these difficult economic times our silent auction sponsors extended themselves above and beyond the call of charity and community support. We want to thank these individuals and business for their belief in our mission and unbelievable level of generosity for our program:

Lyde Angstrom and Laura Burns take part in ongoing, weekly peace vigils sponsored by the South Shore Peace Forum in front of the North Street Post Office in Hingham Square.

Peace activists, say 'Who's next?'

Weekly vigils will continue

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Even though the war in Iraq has ended, peace activists continue to hold their weekly vigils in front of the North Street Post Office.

But now signs bearing messages such as "Winning Doesn't Make It Right" and "Who's Next?" are held beside ones reading "War = failure to wage peace" and "Peace = UN + US pulling together."

Reactions to the presence of South Shore Peace Forum members and other activists are mixed, ranging from jeers called from passing cars ("You don't give up, do you?") to a gentleman who walked up to a sign holder, held out his hand and said, "I know it's not easy. Keep up the good work."

One passerby quietly questioned the group's presence last Saturday. "We've already won!" he said.

Hingham resident Jack Hajj holds a different view.

"This situation should not be allowed to stand," he said. "The war continues to be wrong even after the fact."

On the other hand, several motorists beeped their horns in support of the effort.

Maia Daly of Weymouth, who joined the group in January, is against the war but supportive of the troops. Daly's former husband was Missing in Action during the Vietnam War, so she is more than familiar with the challenges families with members serving in the military often face.

"I was a hawk back then because my husband was serving in Vietnam, but after losing many good friends who died during the conflict, I realized nothing is gained by war except a lot of heartache," Daly said. "A lot of innocent people on both sides lose their lives."

"There's an agenda here we don't know about and we need to continue reminding people that war is not the answer."
— Maia Daly, peace activist

Even though the war is over, Hingham peace activists plan to continue delivering their message.

"Who's next?" Daly asks. "There's an agenda here we don't know about and we need to continue reminding people that war is not the answer."

Longtime Forum member Mary Thomas sees "domestic and international agendas that are inextricably linked, which is eroding our way of life."

The average citizen is now "less secure on all fronts – employment security, retirement, education, and health and child care. Billions of dollars are being spent on the war instead," Thomas said. "Waging peace is a way to have our dollars used for our quality of life and our citizens."

One passerby called out that he didn't see a sign supporting the troops. A sign holder then told him there had been such a sign but the person holding it had left, to which the passerby responded good-naturedly, "Bring it back – it's better than all of those (other ones)."

Stan Doherty and other peace activists remain undaunted by the negative comments thrown out by some and encouraged by the show of support from others.

"Peace is vigilance," he said. "It's not an event but an attitude."

Thomas noted that a number of peace activists displayed yellow ribbons.

"We want our young people who are serving in the military to come home safe, and soon," she said.

The South Shore Peace Forum holds peace vigils Tuesdays from 11:30 a.m. to noon and from 11 a.m. to noon Saturdays.

The Forum was formed in the early 1990s when talk about a possible Gulf War broke out. The group was active throughout that conflict, hosting forums and vigils, including one at Hingham Rotary. The Forum was reactivated briefly in the late 1990s when the United States threatened to bomb Iraq and again a year ago as a means of praying for United States soldiers and Afghan citizens killed in Afghanistan.

The Fab Five

Cohasset lady tracksters pull out truly amazing win over Abington

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

How many tracksters does it take to win an outdoor meet?

Well, considering each athlete can compete in no more than four events and there are 16 events — with five points going to first place finishers, three for seconds and one for thirds—the bare minimum possible, mathematically, would be five. Of course, there's no way that could happen, right?

Prior to this past Wednesday, Cohasset track coach Al LaFontain probably would have lent his assent to that notion. But no longer. His girls team has made him both a believer a beneficiary of what he once considered a virtual impossibility.

When Lisa Musto went down with a back injury after taking a third in her first event last Wednesday, and Alyse Jerome and Allison Krupczak already out of action, LaFountain saw his girls roster drop to the aforementioned bare minimum of five.

But a funny thing happened on the way to improbability. Cohasset's 'Fab Five' took first place in 11 of the 14 events in which they competed, and at least a second or third in every one of the other nine available slots they could fill, and, in the end, walked away 73-61 winners.

"What we accomplished is just about unheard of," acknowledged coach LaFountain. "We needed all five of our athletes to do the absolute best they could, and that's just want they did. I'm just as amazed as anyone."

Leading the way for the Lady Skippers in their simply amazing victory were sophomore Nicole Whitney, who took first in all four of her events, and junior Jen Buckley, with three firsts and a second.

Whitney won the 200- and 400-meter runs, the long jump

Getting even

Straughn, Curry lift CHS baseball team to.500 mark

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

A heads up baserunning play by Trey Curry was the difference in the CHS baseball team's second win of the season last Wednesday, a 7-6 decision at home over Carver.

With one out in the bottom of the fifth inning and the senior Curry on third, he cheated down the line on a comebacker to the mound and then released quickly on the throw to first, getting just under the catcher's tag on the return throw.

Skippers ace Ted Straughn then did the rest. Carver's first batter of the seventh got to second with no outs, but the soph fireballer beared down to get a groundout and two strikeouts to secure the 7-6 win.

The Skippers led 5-0 through three, but Carver reached Straughn for three runs in the fourth, and then three more unearned runs in the fifth to tie the game at 6-6.

Straughn, a sophomore, surrendered just four hits while striking out six for the complete game win.

Chris McKenna and Mike Snowdale (2 RBI) had three hits apiece, while Matt O'Brien (double, 2 RBI) and Trey Curry added two hits apiece.

"This was a very nice win for us over a league opponent," said first year CHS coach Al Galotta, whose team improved to 2-2 (1-1 in South Shore League play). "Ted pitched well, and we came up with the big play at the end. It was a satisfying day."

The Skippers were scheduled to play yesterday against South Shore VoTech in Hanover and Boys tennis team bounces back

Sweep over Carver keeps girls perfect, improves boys to 3-1

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Playing short-handed against a league rival is usually not the best way to build up team momentum before spring break. But the Cohasset boys tennis team, in such a situation, battled for a 3-2 win over Carver last Wednesday, bumping up their record to 3-1 on the year.

The team, with only seven names on the roster to begin with, contains just enough members to fill out a line-up at full strength. If anyone on the team goes down with injury or misses a meet, Cohasset must forfeit one of the five matches, forcing the Skippers to win three of four instead of three out of five.

In this match-up, senior Scott Faber and junior Andrew Wise, who have teamed up as the first doubles pair on the squad, were away on the biannual Belize science trip. This forced second year coach Kent Parrot to shake up the line-up, moving freshmen Nils Sceery and Chris Pescatore to first doubles, and sacrificing the point at second doubles.

Sceery and Pescatore fought valiantly against Carver's former all-star senior pair, splitting 6-3, 3-6 before finally going down 6-4 in the third set. Their effort, in almost winning first singles, shows just how dangerous the tandem can be once they move back to their normal position at second singles.

With Cohasset losing both doubles matches, the Skippers' top three needed to sweep the singles for the team win. Senior captain Dave Ingber, junior Tim Anton and senior Ross Lieb-Lappen all recorded victories at 1, 2 and 3 singles, respectively.

Anton shook off his previous day loss to Abington for a decisive win against senior Jim Paradise of Carver, 6-2, 6-4. His serve and consistent play at the net make him one of the top second singles players in the area. Only Steven Perry of Abington has taken so much as a set off Anton so far this year.

Lieb-Lappen ran his record to 4-0 on the year with another win at third singles. His height and ability at the net seem to be they keys for his success, along with rapidly improving accuracy on his first serve.

Kahn fuels finishing kick

Senior lax attacker's three late goals thwarts Scituate upset bid

The early game struggles of the Cohasset boys' lacrosse team continued on Wednesday, April 16, as the Skippers dug themselves a 2-0 first quarter hole, and spent the next 30 minutes trying to climb out.

It wasn't until there were just under five minutes left in the game, in fact, that Cohasset finally asserted itself. Scituate senior defenseman Jay Dulka, to that point, had contained Skipper scoring leader Curt Kahn to a goal and an assist, and the Sailors found themselves tied 7-7 and daring to believe in a possible first victory ever over Cohasset.

But Kahn broke free from coverage to score an unassisted goal, flicking the ball past Scituate goalie Matt Miner and giving his team only its second lead of the contest. Fifty-six seconds later, Kahn picked up an insurance score on a quick stick of a pass from soph attackman Jake Previte. And, finally, with 30 seconds left, Kahn struck again, breaking up a Scituate clear, and throwing in his fourth goal of the game into an empty net.

"I liked the last five minutes," said head coach Kevin Orcutt, "but our senior leadership has to be there for the entire 48. Scituate played very well, and gave us everything they had. But I felt as if we allowed that. We've got to be more forceful,

Lady Clippers win battle of unbeatens

Norwell prevails in lax showdown with Cohasset

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

For the first half, the battle of unbeatens last Tuesday night between the Norwell and Cohasset girls lacrosse teams was everything a fan of the sport could hope for, the game going to the break with visiting Norwell clinging to a 5-4 lead.

The difference in the second half of the game, played before a large crowd under the lights at Cohasset High, came down to legs. Norwell, two days removed from game action, had them. Cohasset, having notched an emotional victory just 24 hours earlier at New Bedford (a team the Lady Skippers had never before beaten), did not. Followingly, Norwell won going away, 11-5, to improve to 4-0 on the season.

"We just ran out of gas and emotion," asserted second year Cohasset High coach Torin Sweeney, whose team fell to 3-1 with the loss. "We got down early, and our girls battled back to get it to within one at half. Unfortunately, there wasn't much left in the tank after that."

Sweeney concentrated on shutting down Norwell top scorers Colby Tallman and Minnie Doherty to start the game by marking Nicole Turgiss and Maura McKenney on them, and the plan worked well…sort of. The Clippers, of course, feature a triple-prong attack and the Skippers had no answer for sophomore Lauren Strazzulla, who scored the games' first three goals.

Turgiss scored three times and Ashley Faber tallied once to help the Lady Skippers pull within one at the break at 5-4, but the Norwell girls hit the ground running coming back out of the locker room and the hosts simply could not keep up.

Doherty and Tallman shook off their shackles to finish with three goals and two goals, respectively. Strazzulla finished with a game best four goals.

The only goal for Cohasset in the second half was scored by McKenney.

Coach Sweeney also lauded the job done at the defensive end by Libby Meikleham and Nell Brewer throughout the game.

The Norwell girls themselves fell from the ranks of the unbeaten 48 hours later, dropping a 10-7 decision to Bourne at home on Thursday. Of course, several key members of the home squad were away on their class trip to Italy, so coach Jen Kent had to call up several players from the JV squad to fill in. Tallman and Doherty each finished this game with three goals and one assist apiece.

Both teams are off for the vacation week, and get back into action this coming Tuesday, Norwell at home with New Bedford and Cohasset on the road in Duxbury. Both games start at 4 p.m..

SPORTS NOTES

American Legion Baseball signup

The Post 118 American Legion Baseball team will hold tryouts on Sunday, May 11 at 9 a.m. at Scituate High School baseball field. Any player from Scituate or Cohasset interested in playing must attend these tryouts.

Post 118 Team Manager Scott Arnold is still looking for an assistant coach for the team. Anyone interested in the position or with questions regarding tryouts should call Scott at 781-545-1896.

CHS Athletic Fundraising

This winter's ticket raffle by the CHS Athletic Boosters raised over $1,800, according to Ron Ford, with all proceeds going to the CHS Athletic budget. The AD wished to express his thanks to Bob and Allison Silvia for all of the work they did on the drive, as well as to Phil Mahoney and Robert Donahue for donating tickets.

This spring, the boosters are kicking off a sale of official CHS blankets ($50 apiece), flags ($45) and beach towels ($20), all with the official Cohasset High banner.

Anyone interested in making a purchase should contact Ron Ford at 781-383-6103 or send a check made out to "Cohasset High School" to Cohasset High School, C/O Ron Ford, AD; 143 Pond St; Cohasset' MA, 02025.

Youth tennis registration

Youth tennis will begin Monday, June 23, continue for seven weeks through Aug. 8. Youth tennis registrations will be held starting Monday, June 9, and continue throughout that week, as follows: Monday through Wednesday, 9 a.m. to noon and again 1 to 3 p.m., and Tuesday evening from 5 to 7 p.m.

The program is offered for children age 7 through 18. The program is designed on a Monday/Wednesday or Tuesday/Thursday schedule. The fee for the one seven-week session of instruction, two days per week, is $80 per participant. Lessons for beginners, intermediate, and advanced players are offered.

Rainy day policy: If it rains before 9 a.m., all tennis classes may have to be canceled for that day. Please call the Recreation Office at 781-383-4109 for weather status reports. Fridays are rain make-up days.

CHS sports scheduling updates

With all of the postponements of CHS sporting events forced by inclement weather the last two weeks, Athletic Director Ron Ford is urging parents and fans to check his daily voicemail postings (@781-383-6103) for schedule changes before heading out to an event.

and the triple jump.

Buckley won the mile, 2-mile and javelin, and took second in the discus throw to senior teammate La'Raine Langford.

Langford also won the shot put and finished second to teammate Lindsay Kennedy in the 100 meter run.

Mary Silvia won the 800 and placed in three other events.

With four athletes needed to compete in the two relay races, the 4x100 and 4x400, LaFountain had not choice but to forfeit those, giving Abington 16 unchallenged points.

The only events won outright by Abington, which featured a roster of more than 20 girls, were the high jump, 110-meter hurdles and 300-meter hurdles.

The win improved the girls to 2-2 on the season.

The Lady Skippers will get back into action next Wednesday at Mashpee, hopefully with their full 8-girl roster in tow.

Boys fall, 98-38

Unfortunately, the undermanned boys team was no match for their deeper Abington counterparts, and fell to 2-2 on the season.

The Green Wave had several athletes back from the teams the Skippers dominated over the last three seasons, and they extracted their pound of flesh from the graduation and injury depleted Cohasset squad.

Cohasset senior captain Jared Krupczak grabbed his maximum of 20 points, winning the 100, 200, long jump and triple jump.

Krupczak has already qualified for the Class D state meet in a few events, as has his fellow captain Ian Kidder, who missed the last two meets with a hamstring injury. Coach LaFountain is hoping he'll be back for next Wednesday's meet, but noted he may look to handle him "with kid gloves" until the postseason.

Senior Braun Goodson also took second in the 200 against Abington.

Junior Nick Parker, an up and coming first year CHS trackster, took second in the high jump and 300-meter hurdles, as well as a third in the 100-meter hurdles.

Parker is only two seconds shy of qualifying for the state meet in the 300 hurdles. LaFountain is confident he'll notch the necessary mark in the next meet or two and also feels he has an excellent shot at qualifying in the high jump.

"Nick has an awful a lot of promise," said the coach. "I don't think he understands yet how good he could be."

value our possessions better, and demonstrate maturity. I think we'll do that once we get through the vacation week and into the heart of the season."

Cohasset, now 2-1 on the year with all three games counting in the Pilgrim League, scored five goals – the first three by senior attackman Tom Anderson — in the second quarter to pull to 6-5, and then outscored the Sailors 5-1 over the final two periods.

Junior goalie Nick Murphy started his third straight game, and was replaced in the second quarter by soph Chris Simms, after making six saves and allowing four goals. Simms had three saves and gave up a pair of goals, before Murphy returned in the third quarter, and finished up with 10 more saves and only one goal allowed.

"Nick Murphy really responded well when we replaced him with Simms," said Orcutt. "I wanted him to see what was going on, and to collect himself, and he did. He made some great saves in the second half and was a real factor."

Besides Kahn (four goals, one assist) and Anderson (three goals, one assist), Cohasset scorers included senior John Durkin (two goals, one assist), junior Mike Rasmussen (one goal), senior Robert Hickey (two assists) and soph Jake Previte (one assist).

"Defensively, I liked what junior Conor Buick did," said Orcutt. "He made a couple of mistakes early, but he got himself fired up to correct them, and he did. I think he's going to be an important player for us. That said, we have to take fewer penalties. We were in the box eleven times for nine-and-a-half minutes. When you're playing man-down for nearly a full quarter, you're not giving yourself a good chance to win."

Cohasset faces its first non-league foe of the season on Friday, hosting St. John's of Shrewsbury in a first-time meeting of the two schools. The face-off at Alumni Field is scheduled for 1 p.m.. Then the Skippers take on Pilgrim rival Norwell on Tuesday at Alumni in the season's first night game. That start is set for 7 p.m..

Ingber, playing for the fourth time in his career against senior DJ Lenahan, won for the third time in relatively easy fashion, 6-0, 6-2.

GIRLS

The march towards another SSL crown continued for the girls last Wednesday, also taking on their Carver counterpoints on the road. As has been their usual practice, the Lady Skippers dominated for a 5-0 win.

With regular ace Elizabeth Stone on vacation, senior captain Lindsay Grossman stepped into the number one spot for a dominating 6-0, 6-2 win.

Cohasset number one singles player Dave Ingber topped Carver's DJ Lenahan, 6-0, 6-2, on Thursday, to help send the boys tennis team into the vacation week with a 3-2 record.

Boys youth laxers open season to mixed results

After having virtually all of its games and most of its early-season practices rained out, the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program finally fielded all of its boys teams on April 13. While the girls youth squads were out of action due to soggy fields, the boys were trying to shake off the rust with mixed results.

In Sandwich, the Under-15 Boys White team (grades 7 and 8) made the best of its opportunity with a convincing 9-4 win over Sandwich. After a sluggish start, the boys put on an impressive showing as they controlled almost every part of the game from the opening whistle to the final buzzer. Dan Trendowicz was the leading scorer with 3 goals and 2 assists including a nice double fake in front of the cage for the final tally. Chris Mills and Mark Flibotte both got the "poor man's hat trick" with one goal and two assists, while Mike Bunstein also contributed with a goal and an assist.

TJ Kennedy, Mike Grimm, and Chris Davis finished out the scoring with one a piece with assists going to PJ McCaw and Charlie Czerkawski. With all but one goal being assisted, it was clear that this team had not forgotten how to work as an offensive unit. A daunting defense led by Jeff Brown, Mike Bilodeau, Chris Kuppens, and Sam Degiacomo stood tall in front of first-time goaltender Nathan Porter, who put in an impressive rookie performance with 8 saves to keep the game out of reach for Sandwich.

The Cohasset Under-15 Blue team opened its season with an equally dominating performance with a 12-3 road win over Marshfield. After a slow start, the team started rolling in the second quarter and rolled to a commanding 7-1 halftime lead. Austen Lanzillotti led the day's scoring with three goals, Corey Chase, Jared Kinch and Peter Oswald added two each, and Nick Zappolo, Justin Connors and Alex Shipp had single markers.

Cohasset dominated the ground balls with Ryan Kucinski and Sean Silvia leading the charge. Nine of the 12 goals were assisted with Peter Ernst and all of the goal scorers picking up at least one helper. Teddy Galligan also had some nice feeds and played hard at attack. The defensive effort was top notch as well, with Wes Ulmer making 10 saves in net and the close defense of Bobby Meikleham, Robert Sylvia, Jake Cuneo, Kyle Pinkus and Matt Harriman thwarting a hard-charging Marshfield offense.

The Cohasset Under-13 White squad (grades 5 and 6) opened up its 2003 season with a convincing 10-4 win over a physical Marshfield team. Under beautiful sunny skies, the Cohasset boys got after it from the opening face-off and never looked back. First period scores from Eamon Davis, Brendan Doonan, Owen Landon and two from Ian Porter with an assist to Landon had Cohasset up 5-0 at the end of the quarter.

In the second quarter, Cohasset had some fine team offense, particularly from the attack. Philip Schlawinsky got his first goal of the season with an assist to Geoff Evans. Ian Quinlan finished Andrew Bell's second assist of the day and Doonan added his second to give Cohasset an 8-2 lead at the half. Chris Brown was solid in the goal throughout the half.

In the second half, Davis and Chris Brown notched unassisted tallies while Ian Quinlan was rock solid in the cage. Cohasset's defense led by Andersen Lynner, Jonny Wade, Taylor McQuade, Will Lynner, Keegan Flynn kept the Marshfield offense at bay most of the day.

Also in Marshfield, the Cohasset White Under-11 team (grades 3 and 4) dropped a 12-3 decision to a strong Marshfield squad. The first game for the White team saw a very inexperienced squad struggle to get the ball out of its defensive zone. After falling behind 4-0 in the first quarter, Sam Richardson and Thomas Flibotte matched Marshfield's second-quarter output to close the half at 6-2.

Willy Brown was outstanding in his first game in goal during the half, before being relieved by Jake Durkin, who put up several nice stops in the second half.

Terrance Durkin picked up a second-half goal and Patrick Kearney, Christian Allard and Jamie Faber moved the ball well on offense.

Cohasset's Under-11 Blue team narrowly missed a victory with a closely fought game in Pembroke last Sunday.

Pembroke jumped out to a quick 2 - 0 lead in the first quarter but Cohasset's defense solidified in the second and consistently denied the home team. Pembroke picked up its third goal on a penalty fast-break midway through the second quarter, but that was the last of their scoring on the day. Cohasset's defense and first-time goalie Chris Wilson were never dented thereafter.

Chase Murphy stepped up and scored unassisted in the third quarter and Pat McCormack scored on a Chase Murphy assist in the fourth quarter. Alex Evans and Morgan Grasz are new middies who were instrumental in moving the ball up to the attack zone and playing hustling defense when the ball came back the other way. Returning veteran Sam Leahy shone on defense all afternoon while Brendan Horigan, Eric Wasel, and Mark Dick worked tirelessly at both ends of the field.

The score stood at Pembroke 3, Cohasset 2 in the final seconds of the contest when Johnny McGoldrick dodged a field full of defenders to put in the tying shot as the clock reached zero. Unfortunately for Cohasset, the timekeeper ruled that the shot occurred just after time expired, denying the team a hard-fought comeback.

Also in Pembroke, the Cohasset Gray Under-11 team dropped an 8-2 decision. Brennan Bukowski and Kyle Healy put in stellar work in the net keeping the game close, while Drew Cobin scored both goals for the team, with Dean McNary and Chase Murphy contributing great work at midfield.

Lacrosse is here to stay

MIKE SPELLMAN

I'll be honest: I really didn't know what to think of lacrosse when I was basically forced a few years back by the mandates of this job to attend my first game or match or whatever they call it when two teams meet in competition (I still haven't figured that out).

Like a lot of people of my generation, along with a pretty fair portion of the remaining population, this is a sport for which I hadn't quite gained an appreciation.

I'd watched it on TV a few times, primarily for curiosity's sake, but the closest I'd come to observing it first hand before the spring of 2001 was the occasional fleeting glance from a couple of hundred yards away while sitting at a baseball or softball game.

I'll be honest again: I was more than a little surprised, as well as aghast, when I heard reports that spring of more local student athletes going out for lacrosse than baseball and softball. I mean, we were talking about America's pastime here...weren't we?

Sure, I'd seen all the kids walking the street with their lacrosse sticks — particularly in Cohasset where there seemed to be an alarmingly (at least in my mind) high ratio of sticks to bats and mitts — but to hear that there were more laxers than batters in a towns like Norwell and Scituate was, I confess, somewhat distressing.

OK, so this news served as something of a wakeup call for yours truly.

A little research revealed that the popularity of lacrosse was indeed growing at an alarming...er rapid rate. Clearly, this is more than a trendy sport of the moment.

Several high schools in our area have added lacrosse to their spring sports offerings in the last few years, and it seems every spring brings another two or three to the local lax ranks. Six year ago, there was only one state title for high school boys lacrosse. Now, there are three separate divisions.

Lacrosse just became a varsity sport for the first time three years ago in Braintree and Scituate, and for the Norwell girls, and interest at all three of those schools appears to already be catching, if not surpassing, that of the grand old game. In Scituate and Norwell, the programs remain privately funded by boosters programs, but in both cases there is a strong push from within town and school government to add funding to the athletic budgets for these programs.

So, daunted with this knowledge, I figured it was time to swallow my old ideals and check out lacrosse for myself.

You can probably imagine my surprise when I actually found myself following the action, and, what is more, enjoying it. And this is despite the fact that I was lost on most of the strategy, nuances and rules. For example, can anyone explain to me why it is legal to repeatedly whale away on an opponent's shoulder pads but illegal to nudge him slightly from the backside? But I digress.

Lacrosse, I soon discovered, possesses many of the qualities I find so appealing in hockey and football. Speed, athleticism and strength are all essential to success, as are guile and hand-eye coordination. There's also more of a team concept at work than I suspected. In addition, it's a lot more physical than I thought it was. I guess it says a lot about me that I consider this a drawing card....but again, I digress.

An additional parallel I can now draw to hockey is that lacrosse is a game that becomes infinitely more enjoyable when witnessed in person. My favorite comeback to anyone who declares to me that they're not a hockey fan is "Oh, then I guess you've never been to a hockey game."

Whereas the excitement of football, baseball and even basketball (though to a lesser extent) translate pretty well to the tube, hockey is, in my opinion, diminished greatly by broadcasting. The main culprits: the puck is too small to continuously follow and much of the best action takes place off camera/away from the puck. I can now offer the same opinion about lacrosse.

Another big factor in favor of lacrosse: clearly, spring is The Season. Not only is this the preferred time in these parts for outdoor activity, but there was an opening for another sport. Unlike the fall, which features football and soccer (another sport I was originally slow to accept) splitting the interest and athletes pretty much down the middle, and winter, with hockey and basketball, the spring has had only baseball for lo these many years.

Baseball, as much as it still pains me on some level to admit, is not for everyone. High school athletes who prefer team sports to essentially solo endeavors such as track and tennis, should have another option. And, as I can now attest, lacrosse is a pretty cool option.

Boating safety course

The United States Coast Guard Auxiliary and the Cohasset Recreation Department will sponsor a two-session Safe Boating Course, offering certification by both the Coast Guard and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The course will be offered to both youth and adults; however, certification in this course is mandatory for 16-year-olds and under, who wish to operate any horsepower craft. This course is an initial requirement for the process of obtaining a Launch Operators License. U.S.C.G.A. instructors will teach the two-session course, which will be held two consecutive Saturdays, May 31, and June 7, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Ripley Road, Cohasset.

To register, call the Cohasset Recreation Department Office at 781-383-4109 as soon as possible as class will be limited in size and participants will be enrolled on first-call basis. There will be a $35 per person fee for this program, which covers the cost of text book and class materials.

While the class is designed for children/youth and adults, it is suggested that children age 12 and under be accompanied by a participating adult. A segment of the class will be devoted to the new laws regulating personal water craft.

State certification cards will be issued and most insurance companies will offer insurance rate discounts to those completing this course.

Kick-aerobics registration

The Cohasset Recreation Department announces an ongoing registration for adult fitness classes, based upon six-week sessions. Master martial arts and certified aerobic trainer Charles Palmer will conduct the class. This 70-minute class will provide participants with a total body workout through high-energy instruction in step aerobics, kick-boxing, and muscle conditioning. The class will meet Tuesday and Thursday mornings in the Town Hall auditorium from 9 to 10:15 a.m. The cost for the 12-class session is $100 per participant. Step equipment will be provided for up to 20 participants; however, 2 to 5 lb. hand weights should be brought to class for the muscle conditioning segment of the training. Call the Recreation Department at 781-383-4109 to register.

Over-55 softball league opens play April 27

It's "Batter Up" for the opening of the fourth season of the South Shore Senior Softball League on Sunday, April 27 at 10 a.m. at Central Park Field in Scituate.

Jim Hyde, founder and manager of the Senior Softball League is optimistic that the sun will shine, the field will be dry and many regular participants will show up ready to play. This very popular league, sponsored by the Scituate Council on Aging, is open to all those 55 and over.

Jim plans to field four teams and use two Scituate field each Sunday (including Central and the baseball diamond at the rear of the Gates Intermediate School) and one field on Wednesday to ensure all players take the field. Jim asks that all interested players meet at the Central Park playing field (on Branch Street, in front of Central Park Housing) on the 27th. There will be an obligatory registration including rules review, release signing and payment of a $30 fee. Teams will then be divided and play will start at the Gates as well as at the new Central Park Field. Come prepared and ready to play!

For further information, please call the Scituate Council on Aging at 781-545-8722 or Jim Hyde at 781-545-4681.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Summer Arts at Derby

Summer Arts at Derby is beginning its 14th year at Derby Academy in Hingham. The five-week program offers more than 100 courses in visual arts, drama, dance, music writing, photography, martial arts, video, gymnastics and sports. There are also special offerings, such as cooking, Spanish language and culture, yoga, chess, Web page design and Tai Chi.

In addition to regular classes, there is a noon-time show and a free-choice period with new offerings each day. The "Weathervane" newspaper is produced daily. This summer's musical production is the popular "The Music Man." On Friday, Aug. 1, Summer Arts culminates in an Arts Festival featuring performances of theatre, dance, music, gymnastics, and exhibits of clay, painting, furniture, mosaics, puppets, jewelry and photography. Animated films and videos are also shown.

The goal of Summer Arts is to offer a very high quality arts experience to children, ages eight to 15 with an atmosphere that is exciting and bursting with creativity. The children are from diverse racial, cultural and economic backgrounds — 20 Massachusetts communities are represented. One of the main goals is to create a spirit of cooperation and respect, where the students feel supported and free to express themselves.

The program is staffed by professional artist-teachers and together with the students, they create a special summer of artistic achievement, acceptance and exuberant energy.

For more information, please call Thalia McMillon at 781-740-4766.

Seaside Adventures

Seaside Adventures, a new program, will be offered at the Center for Student Coastal Research, starting July 1, and runs for three 2-week sessions through August 7. The program's motto, "inspire excitement" reflects the program's purpose of educating current fourth-through-sixth graders on the topics of oceanography, geology, beach composition, and local habitat preservation and appreciation. All sessions, available in the morning or afternoon, incorporate hands-on learning and may involve excursions to such places as Cohasset Harbor, Sandy Beach and Lily Pond. Each session will meet Tuesday through Thursday, 2-1/2 hours daily, for 2 weeks.

The three sessions each focus on a different theme. In the first session, "Beachcombers," young geologists will explore local beach compositions and tides, and will participate in interesting activities along the shoreline. Session II, "Under the Sea," includes building and examining aquariums, and exploring ocean dwellers ranging from creepy crawlers to fascinating fish. The third session of the summer, titled "Explorers," involves exciting activities caring for the special critters that dwell in our ocean and fresh water ponds.

For more information on the Center for Student Coastal Research's Seaside Adventures please visit its web site, www.ccscr.org, or call our office at (781)-383-8909. Applications are available online, at the Paul Pratt Library, or at the Recreation Department, and can be mailed to 40 Parker Avenue any time before May 1.

Sandcastles enrollment

Sandcastles ChildCare, Preschool & Private Kindergarten, serving children 8 weeks to 6 years announces open enrollment for our Infant, Pre-toddler, Toddler, Preschool, Pre-K and Private Kindergarten programs for ages 8 weeks to 6 years. Sandcastles offers excellent teacher pupil ratios with constructive activities to help children acquire new skills, broaden their interests and improve their abilities. Programs involve fun and learning through a combination of educational programs and activities such as swimming lessons, field trips, beach trips, museum trips, Music Circus trips and weekly visits from the Music Lady.

For additional information or to arrange a visit call Owner/Director Anne Sexton at 781-383-6789 or 781-383-9987.

SSL scholarship

The Social Service League of Cohasset is accepting applications for the Margaret F. Loud, R.N. Scholarship. Applications must be received at the League office by April 18.

SAFEGUARD on the Web

The Project SAFEGUARD Web site is designed as a resource to support the youth and parents in the community. Log on to www.cohassetpso.org/safeguard.htm to see what it's all about.

Along with a Parent Booklist of titles dealing with child development and adolescence, the Web site contains links to news articles, features, and resources for both parents and kids. Topics include Stress (social & academic), Bullying, Body Image, and Drinking & Drugs. The Web site is a work in progress; over time it may expand to cover issues for a wider age range. Your ideas are welcome; visit the site and send in your comments or suggestions!

Project SAFEGUARD is a community initiative designed to supplement the health education program in our schools. It depends on parent and community volunteers, as well as community funding, to keep running.

Ron and Delores Gatnik point out the large scenic painting in their home which is one of several historic houses featured on the annual Hingham Historical Society House Tour.

A colonial with international flare

Featured on tour of historic homes

By Constance Gorfinkle
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

You're far from Hingham when you step into the living room of a grand Federal house on Main Street. Surrounded by frescoed walls of lavender pink, ornately-carved antique furniture, upholstered in vivid reds and golds and arranged on an intricately-designed oriental rug, one thinks of another place and time. That impression is underscored by a large scenic painting on one wall that looks as though it was rendered centuries ago.

"That's a Roman School painting," explains Ron Gatnik, who with his wife, Dolores, have been living in the 1786 Jonathan Cushing house eight years.

That historic dwelling, along with four other period homes, are included in the annual Hingham Historical Society House Tour, which takes place on May 18, from noon to 6 p.m.

Though one thinks of Federal architecture as distinctly American, this house has easily embraced the Italian, French and English furniture and artwork that the Gatniks have brought to it.

It is not surprising that the couple has chosen to give the house a European flavor. While both are of Italian descent, Ron actually is a native of Trieste, Italy, who emigrated to this country alone aboard the storied Andrea Doria when he was only 13.

Throughout, the house reflects their tastes in the many articles they have brought back from their frequent travels, among them a simple Chinese tea set and an exquisite Venetian chandelier that hangs over the dining-room table. Other European purchases include fine wines, which line the shelves of a room in the basement that one day, says Dolores, "will be an attractive wine cellar."

And while they have made many changes to the house, Jonathan Cushing — a member of one of Hingham's earliest families who made his living as a farmer and served as town selectman and representative to the General Court — probably wouldn't have difficulty recognizing it. That's because the main changes - a large addition at the back of the house that includes a family room and kitchen extension, built in the '70s by an earlier owner - don't in any way compromise the architectural integrity of the rest of the house.

In fact, they have enhanced it, by using painting techniques on the walls, upholstery fabrics and floor coverings true to the period of the house. In excellent condition when the Gatniks bought it in 1995, the 10-room house sitting on about three acres of land, primarily has undergone decorative changes, says Dolores. "We took off all the wallpaper, changed all the lighting in the kitchen and updated the bathrooms.

"There's not a surface we haven't done over," adds Ron.

Besides its traditional beauty being maintained over the centuries, the Cushing house today has all the amenities, including a lovely glassed-in garden room that maintains its warmth so well even during winter that the Gatniks can comfortably eat breakfast there.

The couple, who formerly lived on Crow Point, gave up their ocean views for the Cushing house, "because we were so taken with the charm of an old house," says Dolores.

Ron also was attracted to the house because its style resonated with him. "Did you know," he asks, "that Federal design was inspired by early Roman architecture?"

Other houses on the Hingham Historical Society house tour include the 1846 Issacher Fuller cottage, an 1895 Shingle Style home with an impressive staircase and double parlor; a remodeled 1855 summer cottage with spectacular water views, and a 1922 Dutch Colonial. Also on the tour will be a house built in 1929 that served as the first Girl Scout House in New England, which is still used today for troop meetings and other activities.

Among the historic sites on the tour are the 1688 Old Ordinary, the 1818 Old Derby Academy (both of which are owned and maintained by the Society), the 1689 Old Ship Church and Hingham Cemetery, where many of the town's early settlers are buried.

Tickets are $15 in advance and $20 on tour day. They are available at Bowl and Board in Hingham Square, the Hingham Public Library at 66 Leavitt St. and Noble's Camera Shops in Hingham Square and Lincoln Plaza. Tickets on tour day will be sold only at the Old Ordinary, 21 Lincoln St., after 9 a.m. At that time also tickets my be exchanged for tour books.

To order tickets by mail, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope and a check to the Hingham Historical society, P.O. Box 434, Hingham, MA 02043. Mark the envelope "house tour."

For more information, call 781-749-1851 or 781-749-1574. One may also visit the Society's website: http://www.hinghamhistorical.org

WORSHIP NOTES

Abbey series on 'finding meaning'

The Glastonbury Series for 2002-03, :Listening to Other Voices: Hope in a Time of Uncertainty" continues with Rabbi Karyn Kadar who will talk about "Finding Meaning and Purpose for Ourselves and Those We Serve." This event is Thursday, May 1 at 7:15 p.m. at Glastonbury Abbey.

Rabbi Kadar lived in Jerusalem for 10 years and was the first female to serve as a rabbi in Jerusalem. She is currently the director of the Great Lakes Region of American Hebrew Congregations, serving 62 congregations in five midwest states.

Among her topics of interest is Jewish spirituality. She is a contributor to "The Jewish Lights Spirituality Handbook" and "The Women's Torah Commentary." She is also the author of "Gifts from Our Grandmothers."

Please call the Abbey to reserve a place for this inspiring discussion at 781-749-2155. A free-will offering, the evening of the event is much appreciated.

Prayers for peace

Saint Stephen's since 1990 has prayed continuously for world peace every Wednesday at 5:30 p.m. in its chapel. Prayers are for our troubled world and for all God's people everywhere — for peace, forgiveness and reconciliation. Jesus asks prayers for one another and for enemies as well. Prayer can unite people globally in a way nothing else can. In a 20-minute Wednesday service of Evening Prayer, all innocent victims of war, those who serve sacrificially in the armed forces, all relief and disaster agencies, hospital and care providers, chaplains, the media personnel who influence so much in the world, the President and all in authority, the United Nations and all who work for peace with compassion and justice all over the world are prayed for.

Afternoon of poetry and music pulls on the heartstrings

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

There's no better time than National Poetry month for local poets to share their work with the community.

To celebrate the occasion, published poet Elizabeth Carter Torrey and Celtic Harpist Joanne Cavatorta combined their talents to present an afternoon of poetry and music at Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset, joined by local poets with stories of their own to share. Last week, the duo hailed the arrival of Spring on a sunny day at Buttonwood.

"Welcome to the Northeast branch of the Poetry Renaissance in North America," Torrey quipped to the audience. "We thought everyone could use an infusion of spring poems of hope and promise."

Torrey shared a wide variety, ranging from those of Persian Sufi mystic Rumi, who advises the world to "let the beauty we love be what we do," to one written by a Yugoslav poet.

"As we work through our days with our lives on fast-forward and our exhaustive 'to do' lists, we need time out for contemplative moments," Torrey said. "Poetry is a steady witness to what feels real to our hearts."

Torrey started by reading several works of others, including a poem by David Whyte of Wales, who teaches poetry courses to CEO's to help them to speak about matters of the heart; the moving "Nothing Gold Can Stay" by Robert Frost, who Torrey said "speaks of things sadly beautiful"; and Pulitzer Prize-winning poet Mary Oliver's poem about Spring trilliums. The last, representing the "patient parable of the Springtime, year after difficult year," was also an audience pleaser.

Then came what everyone had been waiting for – one of Torrey's own poems, "Saying Yes to the Muse of Winter," written during the Feb. 17 blizzard. The poem, about the Carolina wren, so captivated the audience that they asked her to repeat it. The poem reads in part, "You sing what is true, You sing what I cannot, What hunger lies at the heart of your searching and of mine?"

Torrey started doing poetry readings in 1980. Nearly 20 years later, she and longtime friend Cavatorta, a certified music practitioner who took up the harp on her 50th birthday, decided to collaborate professionally. They offer "Touchstones and Turning Seasons" events, which combine poetry reading and harp music. At first Cavatorta played tunes that matched the mood of the poetry, whether sad or playful, but only between the poems. Later the two decided to blend their talents, with Cavatorta playing while Torrey reads. They've been captivating audiences with their resulting moving presentation of poetry and lyrical music ever since.

"There's a dual impact," Torrey said. "More than one sense is being touched." Cavatorta summed up the experience perfectly: "Harp music and poetry are both the language of the soul."

The performances are tailored to suit the audience, setting, and season. Torrey reads familiar classical and contemporary poems, mixing in some of her own full-bodied, mellow verses and weaving in interesting details about the poets and their times.

Other local poets followed during an open microphone segment.

Carole Borges of Hull shared a poem she wrote for her granddaughter about swans who return year after year to Broad Cove near the Hingham Lobster Pound.

Pearls

I never liked pearls.
Their refusal to sparkle, their maddening uniformity, their mute march up up and around the slender neck of somebody's remembered mother.

All harmony, no melody, like a bell choir pealed in perfect accord by immaculate gloved hands.
Reaching for nothing.
Transcending nothing.

Bastards, they traded us resolute dullness for fire, murmured pleasantries for the aria penned alone one night in a cold, damp room

Do you suppose they plotted it, whispering from one chill
briny womb to another?
Hush, hush, they said at the diver's approach.
Hush.

Judy Dickstein of Cohasset writes both fiction and poetry. "I have a nursing background and feel that the profession is as much an art as a science," she said. "I have been writing for just a few years, mostly prose, but the occasional poem seems to take hold of my mind and demand to be shaken loose."

Dickstein also co-facilitates a writer's group at Buttonwood Books on the second and fourth Mondays of each month from September to May. "The group acts as a catalyst to keep me writing," she said. "The more I practice, the better my mind functions."

That's evidenced by the poem she shared.

The Hingham Swans

for Melissa Peralta

Every spring the Hingham swans build their nest
on the same mud pedestal, smack in the center of the Hingham pond.

A public boudoir, splendiferous with bent necks and open-beaked kisses.

Every time we drive by,
my granddaughter Melissa's melodious voice sings the same song:

They come here every year.
The babies fly away.
They're brown until they're grown.

I tell her swans mate for life.
If one bird dies, the other grieves forever.

All summer, we watch and count . . .
one swan . . . two swans . . .

If we can't find them both,
we stop the car and hold our breath and search the reedy shore

because we know if one should die, the other's grief would be our own.

"My granddaughter was enthralled each time as if it were the first. It's such an important ritual," said Borges, who says she's revised the poem "thousands of times."

Hingham resident and freelance writer Jane Ward Curtin, who studied literature in Ireland, writes short stories and poetry.

"Since I've had kids, I write poems in my free time," she said. "They inspired me." Many of her poems center around motherhood.

Playgroup

My friends and I inspect each other's hands, each more cracked and dry than the last.

We've been washing bottles and small, slippery bodies.
Scrubbing ourselves like pre-op doctors on TV.

"Bag Balm," says a friend.
"They use it on cow udders."
"Poor cows," says another.
My friends and I nod silently in sympathy

On another note, Curtin also shared her poem about pearls.

Fading

I sit by the window
The back yard's aglow
There's a rosy sunset
And the water below

This is a good day
I know what I see
Some days I'm not
Even sure that I'm me.

Some days I lose me
I just go away.
And then I can't find me
At the end of the day.

Life ebbs and flows
Like the tides in the bay
I ride those tides out
Ever longer each day.

One day I'll keep going
On my own special sea
And my mind will forever
Leave the body called me.

Joyce Wilson of Scituate hosts poetry readings at local libraries, including Hingham Public Library. The next one, centering around the arrival of Spring, will held at Scituate Public Library on Wednesday, May 7, from 7 to 8:45 p.m.

One of her poems, "Crows," has been accepted by "Salamander," a journal published in Brookline, Mass., by poet Jennifer Barber.

"Crows interested me because I always saw three at a time in my garden and other places," Wilson said.

Crows

The first one looks awry
with a single, crooked eye.

The next prefers to stand apart preoccupied with self and art.

The third is just a slender form, a fear within that grows and gnaws and caws, a withering.

2.
When I sat down to write,
I was free like a child,

but in truth I had a daughter who talked back and cried.

The local grocery housed our meals and memories of the hurried step of my mother, her worrying.

3.
I am beset by visitations:
three crows arrive at dawn,

alight on leafless boughs, and guard their young.

They cannot sing but voice
a clamoring,

an unmelodious length of song for daily bread.

Torrey left the enthusiastic audience with words of encouragement: "It's my hope that the beauty and honesty of today's poems will strengthen and expand the green (living) places in your heart."

Audubon show highlights scenic landscapes

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Staff members at the Massachusetts Audubon Society's South Shore Regional Office, on Route 3A in Marshfield, they're hoping that one annual calendar event might help to generate another.

In October, the local Audubon Society office sponsors its yearly Daniel Webster Farm Day, a day-long fundraiser festival of arts and crafts, hayrides, games, food and other nature-related activities open to the public and held in Marshfield's Daniel Webster Wildlife Sanctuary. In more recent years, the Society has extended the event's festivities to include invitations to artists from Marshfield's North River Arts Society paint or offer painting demonstrations at various points on the Sanctuary's woodlands trail.

As a compliment to the NRAS artists who have participated in Farm Day fests, the Audubon Society and North River Arts has introduced its possibly annual spring exhibition in its Marshfield office. The inaugural exhibit, with the appropriately nature-based theme and title of "The Painted Landscape," opened last weekend (April 12) at the Audubon's facility in Marshfield and will run there through April 30.

"Like the Farm Day events in the fall, we're hoping that this new event in the spring will be a way to encourage people to get out on our sanctuaries, and to further promote environmental issues," said the Audubon's South Shore director Ellen Einhorn. "The show is also here to thank the North River Society artists who helped us out in the Farm Day festivals, who in keeping with our focus on nature and the environment, are artists who like to paint en plein air (in the open air)."

In addition to the Audubon's sanctuary lands in Marshfield, at the local regional office on 3A and the Daniel Webster and North River Wildlife Sanctuaries, the non-profit organization oversees the North Hill Marsh Wildlife Sanctuary in Duxbury.

Farm Day II by Don Dacier

The annual Farm Day and its site at the Webster Wildlife Sanctuary are in fact the subjects of several paintings included in "The Painted Landscape," which showcases works by eight NRAS artists from the South Shore area focused on oil landscapes. Two views of Farm Day, fittingly titled "Farm Day I" and "II," are by Don Dacier, and depict sunny-day scenes amidst the Sanctuary grounds peopled by attendee figures of family groups and others strolling among American

The cast of "The Music Man" is set to bring the production to Boston April 30 to May 11 and includes former Weymouth resident Jean Liuzzi.

The Music Woman

Weymouth's Jean Liuzzi in national tour of Tony award-winning musical

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

One of the best-known songs in Meredith Willson's "The Music Man" tells of trouble in River City. The legendary musical has meant nothing but happiness, however, for Jean Liuzzi — a former Weymouth resident who is in the cast of the show's current touring company which opens at Boston's Colonial Theatre next week.

"I have very fond memories of this show, because it was the first really big musical I ever did," explained Liuzzi during a telephone interview from New Mexico. "I was in chorus during my sophomore year at Weymouth North in the 1970s, when I was cast in my high school production of 'The Music Man.' Four years ago, I got to do the show again with the New Bedford Festival Theatre."

In addition to her role in the chorus as Mrs. Paine, one of the gossipy Iowa townsfolk, Liuzzi is also understudy for the role of Mrs. Paroo, mother to the female lead, Marian the Librarian. With three different stints in the show, in three different roles and in three different decades, Liuzzi knows a thing or two about what has made "The Music Man" such a lasting success.

"This show works so well, especially now, because it emphasizes family connections and small-town American values," said Liuzzi. "In the story, everybody finds something that makes their life better. Also, as a performer, this tour is just an incredibly joyous experience for me."

Jean Liuzzi recalls being in the chorus her sophomore year at Weymouth High School which sparked her interest in acting and singing.

If sometimes a daunting one. "With just two weeks of rehearsals, I had to learn to play 'Seventy-Six Trombones' on the trombone while marching at the same time for the big finale. That was definitely the most challenging part of preparing for this production. It was lots of fun though, too, and the audiences really love that number which makes it all worthwhile."

Audiences have long enjoyed following the antics of con-artist turned conductor, Harold Hill, as he convinces the citizens of River City, Iowa, that he can teach their children to play in a marching band. Only after Marian, the town librarian, discovers his secret does the plot thicken. Featuring memorable songs such as "Till There Was You," and "Gary, Indiana," Meredith Willson's "The Music Man" has been a staple on the professional and community theater circuits for decades.

The current national tour features choreography by five-time Tony Award winner Susan Stroman and direction by Ray Roderick, who is adapting Stroman's direction of the 2000 Broadway revival for this production. Meredith Willson's production first opened in New York on Dec. 19, 1957 and starred Robert Preston and Barbara Cook. With book, music and lyrics by Meredith Willson and story by Meredith Willson and Franklin Lacey, it won eight Tony Awards, even beating "West Side Story" for the Best Musical Award.

For Liuzzi, 46, her current assignment affirms her decision to return full-time to performing after a period away from show business.

"I taught drama and music at a private high school in Michigan for several years, before returning to the Boston area several years ago. Once I came back to Massachusetts, I resumed my acting career," she explains. "I've never been an ingenue. So when I reached a certain age, I knew it was time to start playing mothers — especially since I looked like one when I was in high school and college. I was playing character roles. In my 20s, however, I couldn't get much character work. In

1975 Series knocked his Sox off

New book details the greatest World Series ever played

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

As a California kid, Tom Adelman was one lousy baseball player. He remembers one time, during a brief stint as a pitcher, that the bases were loaded and he kept walking in one man after another. The umpire finally came out and gave him a pep talk, promising that if he got anything anywhere near the strike zone, he would call it a strike.

Moving to Quincy as an adult, he's no fan of Fenway Park, grousing that he's paid an awful lot of money for obstructed views of the field and uncomfortable seats.

Although he's a longtime Dodgers fan, he also cheers for the Red Sox. And he celebrates his love of the game by deconstructing the tense, surprise-filled 1975 World Series showdown between the Red Sox and the Cincinnati Reds in his new book "The Long Ball: The Summer of '75 — Spaceman, Catfish, Charlie Hustle, and the Greatest World Series Ever Played" (Little, Brown).

In the book, he argues that 1975 was a landmark year for baseball — from the introduction of the designated hitter to the growing popularity of Astroturf to the impending rise of free agency. The book captures a colorful collection of veterans and rookies during a dynamic time in baseball history. And finally, it focuses on the excruciating seven-game series that gave us baseball's most indelible image: Sox catcher Carlton Fisk dancing down the first-base line, trying to wave and will his home run ball into fair territory.

"I was 11 when the series happened," recalls Adelman. "But I didn't see the Fisk home run because it was a school night and it happened really late."

But he's seen it many times since. And he's heard it on radio broadcast recordings. And he's read about it in book after book. He got to work on his own book around the time of the "subway series" between the Yankees and the Mets in 2000. Research and writing was completed about a year and a half later.

Adelman says he wanted his book to focus more on the stories than the statistics. "I wanted to have as few numbers as possible," he say. "I wanted to create the characters more as flesh-and-blood mortals rather than personifications of various digits and numerals."

But before doing any writing, Adelman had to plan his method of research.

"First, you write letters to everyone on the rosters of the Reds and the Red Sox, and everyone of interest in the game at that point," he says. "And then you sit back and wait while none of them respond."

He exaggerates. Some people got back to him. Adelman ended up having a long visit with Red Sox outfielder Fred Lynn, and lengthy talks with Sox pitcher Bill Lee and Reds pitcher Rawlie Eastwick.

"After I spoke with them, I drove over to Cooperstown," says Adelman, referring to the home of the National Baseball Hall of Fame. "I spent about a month going through the archives in their library. I did nothing but read books, newspapers, magazines and whatnot for about a year."

And through this research, through his discovery of contemporaneous press accounts of what the players were thinking

Quesadillas

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

A quesadilla is really nothing more than a grilled cheese sandwich – just substitute tortillas for white sandwich bread. Something this simple might appear, on the surface, to require no testing but I quickly discovered that the tortillas can be soggy or odd-flavored, the cheese can be oily or just plain bizarre-tasting, and the whole thing can end up being more like nursery food than an appetizer or lunch offering for folks who are old enough to vote.

For starters, I just focused on the tortillas, the cheese, and the basic cooking method leaving aside the notion of other fillings. The authentic Mexican version is actually made using an uncooked corn tortilla that is filled, folded over and cooked on a comal (a round, flat griddle placed over a fire for cooking tortillas). I tried using a store-bought corn tortilla that was folded over, filled and cooked in a skillet and the results were disappointing. The corn tortilla tasted very dry and the texture was soft and wobbly. Also its cardboard flavor completely overpowered the mild cheese typically used in a quesadilla. I then, against my better judgment, tried to make my own fresh corn tortillas but the dough was very difficult to work (and I think of myself as a fairly experienced dough-worker) and the masa I was able to purchase in the grocery store was lackluster in taste, therefore rendering my attempt at authenticity unsuccessful. So it was back to store-bought tortillas, this time the flour, rather than the corn, varieties.

Flour tortillas come in a few sizes and flavors. I was sure I wanted to use plain tortillas — sun-dried tomato and spinach varieties are best left for the gourmet crowd. As for the sizes, I thought the eight-inch worked best — the six-inch tortillas are small and the 12-inch ones don't sit flat in anything but a huge pan. The freshest-tasting tortillas are sold in the refrigerator case. Try to find those that feel the softest and are lightest in color. Avoid brands that appear dark and wet.

As for the cheese, I tried using Jack, cheddar, mozzarella, American, fontina, Swiss and Gruyere. The Jack was the favorite for a couple of reasons. It is smooth when melted and has the most authentic flavor. It is mild but not bland and is easy to pair with other fillings or toppings. The cheddar was oily and uneven when melted. The American tasted too much like a kids' cheese sandwich and was not nearly as good with any of the fillings or toppings. The fontina was my second favorite, but it is a bit sharper and didn't taste quite right in this dish. The Swiss and Gruyere were rubbery, especially when the tortillas had cooled a bit. Rick Bayless, as well-known authority on Mexican cooking, calls for Chihuahua, quesillo or asadero, but I didn't find any of those at my local market. For 8 tortillas I used 10 ounces of cheese. I found the easiest way to evenly distribute the cheese was to grate it using the large holes of a box grater. You end up with about 2 1/2cups of grated cheese, which is roughly1/3 cup of cheese per tortilla.

The easiest way to cook tortillas is in a heavy-duty non-stick or cast iron skillet. A 12-inch skillet is the best size. The skillet should be placed over medium heat. Once a tortilla is lightly brushed with vegetable oil it goes in the skillet oil-side down. Then the cheese is sprinkled over the surface, being careful not to go over the edge of the tortilla and onto the pan. If you're using one of the additional fillings (see below) 1/4 cup should be evenly distributed to one half of the tortilla. When the cheese starts to melt the tortilla is folded in half. Flip the tortilla a couple of times to allow the cheese to melt and the tortilla to become spotted golden brown and slightly crisp on both sides, about two to three minutes. By heating a baking sheet in a low-heat oven you can keep the finished tortillas warm.

SIMPLE AMERICAN QUESADILLAS

Monterey Jack is my favorite cheese for this recipe but fontina was also quite good.

8 flour tortillas about 8 inches in diameter

10 ounces Monterey Jack cheese, coarsely grated, about

2 1/2 cups vegetable oil for brushing

Place a baking sheet in the oven and heat to 200 degrees. Heat a 10- or 12-inch non-stick or cast iron skillet over medium heat. Brush one tortilla lightly with the vegetable oil. Place the tortilla in the skillet, oiled-side down. Top with 1/3-cup cheese being careful not to go over the edge of the tortilla and onto the pan. If using an additional filling (see below) it should be added now. Once the cheese has started to melt fold the tortilla in half using a large spatula. Flip the tortilla every minute or so until the cheese is well melted and the tortilla is spotted golden brown and slightly crispy, about 2-3 minutes. Transfer to warm baking sheet and repeat with remaining tortillas and cheese. Cut each tortilla into 4 wedges and serve immediately with fresh salsa and guacamole.

Serves 6 to 8

SERVING SUGGESTIONS

The warm tortillas are great appetizers, snacks or a light lunch or supper when served with a salad. They are delicious with additional fillings such as but not limited to: sautéed onion, pepper, mushrooms, potatoes or cooked chicken or pork (a great use for leftovers). The fillings must be seasoned well with salt and pepper or else the tortillas will taste bland. You should count on 1/4-cup filling for each tortilla. Once the cheese is applied the additional filling should be evenly distributed on half of the tortilla before it is folded.

The glorious blooms of April

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the colorful chalices of early crocuses begin to wane and the fringed yellow blossoms of the witch hazel fade after more than a month-long display, a parade of fresh springtime blossoms prepares to march across our slowly emerging landscapes.

For several weeks, many of these springtime treasures have appeared on the verge of bursting forth but gray skies and chilly temperatures have hampered their arrival in all but the most protected locations. A pleasant, sunny Easter weekend seemed the perfect time for the procession to get underway.

During these early weeks of spring, gardeners seem to welcome every color in the landscape, regardless of their usual color preferences. Having endured nearly six months of stark silhouettes, prolonged snowcover and the drab tints of winter, even the most outrageous color combinations seem acceptable. These vibrant hues are particularly noticeable due to the minimal quantity of foliage present. In the weeks to come, green leaves will dominate our landscapes, helping to blend and neutralize intensely colored blooms as the growing season progresses. For the present, we yearn for color and gardeners will be rewarded with each passing day as flowering trees, shrubs, bulbs and perennials paint the landscape with cheerful abandon.

Drifts of deep blue Siberian squill (Scilla) and lavender-blue Chionodoxa create a magnificent backdrop for stunning clumps of early daffodils that raise their trumpets to the warm morning sunshine heralding the arrival of springtime. A few dozen tiny Scilla bulbs were planted many years ago and have naturalized beneath a Heritage birch to produce a stunning carpet reminiscent of a deep blue sea. Throughout my shady borders, Chionodoxa have magically appeared over the years as perennials were moved about transporting the dormant little bulbs along with them. Small star-shaped light blue blossoms are highlighted by white centers. As the foliage of these lovely little bulbs declines, the broad leaves of hosta help to conceal their yellowing leaves.

The handsome hellebores are spectacular this season, most likely appreciative of the prolonged snow cover. The elegant white blossoms of the Christmas rose (H. niger) are beginning to unfold atop rigid, fleshy stems. As their silky, white petals age, they gradually acquire tints of dusty rose. Nearby, several clumps of its cousin, the Lenten rose (H. orientalis) are covered with dozens of saucer-shaped blooms that will persist for weeks. This winter's weather seems to have taken its toll on their glossy semi-evergreen foliage, but new leaves will soon emerge. I have acquired several new L. Helleborus 'Heritage' hybrids in recent years. In addition to the traditional mauve-colored blossoms, these updated cultivars may produce clusters of two- to three-inch blossoms in shades of pink, purple, yellow, green, or white. A stunning new clump featuring dusty, deep purple blooms with pale lemon yellow stamens is particularly appealing.

Perhaps my favorite new addition boasts creamy white flowers generously spotted with rose pink freckles. These unique early bloomers prefer moisture-retentive, organic soils in dappled shade and offer multi-season interest with their long-lasting blooms and leathery, evergreen foliage.

Lemon chiffon clouds of sunny yellow forsythia bushes sparkle in the afternoon sunlight. Effective as a hedge or a specimen plant, flower color ranges from icy lemon to electrifying golden yellow. These rapidly growing shrubs are extremely adaptable to a wide variety of conditions but thrive in moisture-retentive soils in full sun, sending up suckering shoots to quickly produce multi-stemmed bushes up to 10 feet high and wide. Forsythia can be moved while flowering, but is best relocated before leaves appear. As flowers fade, a severe pruning of this vigorous shrub will promote compact growth. Old, thick, woody canes should be cut to the ground and removed entirely. Buds will be formed later in the season and an early pruning will maximize flower production on new growth.

The delicate, rosy-purple flowers of the Korean Rhododendron (R. mucronulatum) and the soft pink blossoms of a selected variety of this deciduous rhododendron, 'Cornell Pink', though fleeting and susceptible to frosty evenings, are a welcome sign of spring. Fuzzy, gray buds on the tips of star magnolias (Magnolia stellata) have swelled and split open to reveal glistening, snow-white blossoms. The Cornelian cherry (Cornus mas) has started to bloom with sunny yellow puffs of tiny flowers against a backdrop of handsome, cinnamon-colored, exfoliating bark.

As I stroll through the landscape, the sweet scents of springtime permeate the fresh spring air. The heavenly perfume of hyacinths drifts across the garden carried by a warm gentle breeze; dense clusters of satiny, tubular bells on stocky, fleshy stems brighten the landscape in shades of royal purple, glistening white, and luscious shades of pink. Andromedas (Pieris japonica) provide the shrub border with a unique combination of sweetly scented, dense clusters of milky-white cascading bells in early spring and attractive whorls of dark green leaves year-round. The distinctive scents of bronze fennel, lavender and catnip joined these aromatic delights as the herb garden had been clipped and raked earlier in the day.

As evening approached, the slanted rays of the setting sun electrified the fluffy rusty-red and yellow blooms of our native swamp maples. Nearby, the silvery silken catkins of pussy willows have erupted to become fluffy, pale yellow flowers that sparkled in the sunlight. A perfect spring day came to a close as the resonating tones of spring peepers drifted through the meadow from the nearby wetlands while robins serenaded the glory of spring.

the professional theater, age appropriateness is always a casting consideration. When I was a bit older, I got back into acting because I thought it would be my time to finally go after the full range of character parts."

After finding steady work with companies like Fiddlehead Players, Turtle Lane and Boston Theaterworks, the Temple University theater arts graduate decided it was time to stretch even a bit more.

"I was doing 'Nunsense' at Fiddlehead just about two years ago when a friend gave me a copy of the audition notice for this show. I'd been doing well with my acting career again, and also singing with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, but I'd never done a tour so I thought I would audition and see what developed. It was thrilling to actually be cast."

Out with the show since last October, Liuzzi has no problem with a steady diet of different cities and new hotel rooms almost every week.

"I've always loved to travel, and I love the theater so I'm loving being on the road."

(Jean Liuzzi will appear in Meredith Willson's "The Music Man" at the Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston St., Boston, from April 30-May 11. For tickets and information visit the box office or call 617-931-2787. Tickets are also available at The Wilbur Theatre, 246 Tremont St., Boston. Student and Senior 65+ Rush tickets for $25 will be sold the day of performance, one hour prior to curtain at The Colonial Theatre only - one ticket per valid ID; not offered Saturday evenings; subject to availability.)

Captured on canvas

flags, vendor carts and other festival decor items. The Wildlife Sanctuary in its natural state - the green-covered, unaltered surroundings without the crowds drawn to Farm Day - is captured in Susan B. Charles's representational piece "Daniel Webster Wildlife Sanctuary."

Interestingly, both Dacier and Charles offer distinct perspectives of Marshfield's scenic Damon's Point, one an aerial view of the densely tree-lined riverbank, the other a detailed zoom-in on one of the area's many marsh-filled coves. Most of the show's total works feature landscapes from in and around the South Shore, while some head north to Maine and New Hampshire, all painted in the full varieties of weather to notably contrasting effects of light and shade.

Among the other show members, Jeanne McFarland's "Back to Egypt" is perhaps misleadingly titled except for Scituate residents, offering a quaint view of the cottages overlooking the artist's former dwellings on Egypt Beach. Jody Regan's "Harvest Waltz" presents elegant, dusky shades of color and light in its portrait of two figures screening for shellfish by the riverbank against a towering evergreens backdrop. Ellen Whelan's "Nemasket Reflections" spotlights a somber, evocative coastal scene.

Other participants in the exhibit include Corinne Campobasso, Susan Davis and Susan Lynch Raffa. Collectively, the artists show a deep appreciation for the natural beauty of classic New England landscapes as well as a strong eye for capturing them on canvas.

1975 Series knocked his Sox off

at any given at-bat, he developed a refreshing writing style that separates this from other baseball books.

"Invariably, after every important game, the players were asked by reporters what they were looking at and thinking about at that time," he says. "Most sports books do this by recounting it in a past tense, a sort of retrospective manner. I just wanted to capture something of the spontaneity and immediacy of the game, so I put it all in the present tense."

The book is easy reading for anyone from a hardcore fan to a non-fan.

"I don't think I was consciously trying to do that," says Adelman. "The simple fact is that I'm married to a woman that could care less about baseball, and I don't really have any friends that care about baseball. But at the end of the day, I had to tell these people what I had been doing, and from explaining it to them it sort of crossed over, and I started putting those things into the work."

While Adelman, 39, remains a fan of the sport, he also misses something from the days of his youth.

"I grew up listening to Vin Scully announce the Dodgers games," he says. "He was really into building each player into a character in a drama that you were listening to. But I don't get that listening to a game anymore. You watch or listen to a game now, and it's a very loud thing. Even in the park there has to be music pounding between plays. I miss the moments of reverie that baseball can provide."

POWER PLAYS

Hearing instrument users should take into account that the standard battery for their hearing devices lasts between five and forty days, depending on the type of instrument, capacity, type of battery, and how much the hearing instrument is used. Battery capacity is measured in milliampere hours (mAh), which is an indication of how long a battery can last. The higher the number, the longer lasting the battery. When the sounds from hearing instruments are distorted, or if the volume needs to be turned up more than usual, it is time to change the battery. Because hearing aid batteries tend to lose their power quite suddenly, it is a good idea to travel with an extra set.

In addition to the tiny, state-of-the-art hearing instruments available, today's technology is also evident in the tiny, powerful batteries that allow the devices to do their job. When your present hearing instrument is in need of replacement batteries, remember that FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER receives battery shipments on a regular basis. They don't sit on the shelf for months at a time. And while you're here at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, we'll check your hearing aid, too. PH: 781-337-1144. We offer FREE batteries for the life of any hearing instrument purchased, FREE hearing evaluations, and FREE repairs of any make of hearing aid.

P.S. When carrying extra batteries, keep them away from coins and other metal objects that might cause them to discharge.

The Beatles music set the pop rock standard for most of the 1960s. Forty years later, they continue to define a generation as evidenced by the huge success of the recently released "Beatles Anthology" on DVD. These days, however, if a Paul McCartney concert doesn't do the trick and Ringo Starr and His All Star Band seem less than stellar, "BeatleMania Live!" may be as close as you can get to seeing the Beatles in concert. The cast of "BeatleMania Live!" performs more than 30 Fab Four favorites — live and note for note — and even makes three clever costume changes to evoke each era from the group's early Ed Sullivan appearance to Sgt. Pepper and Abbey Road.
"BeatleMania Live!" also performs with full orchestration to capture the original sound of the Beatles greatest hits "Yesterday," "Penny Lane" and "Let It Be." "BeatleMania Live!" comes to life on Saturday, April 26, at Plymouth Memorial Hall, 83 Court Street, Plymouth. For tickets and information call 866/468-7619 or visit www.ticketweb.com.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23

An Aquarius moon takes over at 2:58 a.m., remaining there for the next two and one-half days. Networking and innovative thinking become principal themes. The moon aligns with Mars at 4:27 a.m., Venus at 6:51 a.m. The last quarter phase of the moon begins at 8:18 a.m. This moon decreases in light until May 1, when a new moon occurs. There is one potential stumbling block, however, in effect between 4:50-7:50 p.m., when the moon opposes Jupiter. Be careful not to go to extremes; balance optimism with discretion.

THURSDAY, APRIL 24

An Aquarius moon makes this day great for developing projects that need help or support from others. Keep an open mind. Try new ideas or techniques to solve old problems. You can achieve breakthroughs, sudden insights. The moon interacts with Neptune in the morning and Pluto, Mercury in the afternoon. All social activities are highlighted this evening. Gather with friends and enjoy good food, music, conversation.

FRIDAY, APRIL 25

This can be a 'fun' day, if you don't have a lot to do. If you are working, it is best to handle routine chores and finish old business. Don't take on more than you can handle. Allow extra time for unanticipated delays or distractions. The Aquarius moon becomes inactive at 2:18 a.m. until 11:07 a.m., when a Pisces moon takes over. At 3:04 p.m. the moon aligns with Uranus, prompting you to get an early start to the weekend. Enjoy favorite hobbies, sports; spend extra time with friends and family. Follow your bliss.

SATURDAY, APRIL 26

The planet Mercury actually begins retrograde travel at 7:59 a.m., 20 1/2 degrees Taurus. It is best to sleep on new ideas and hold off taking action until May 20, when Mercury turns direct. This brings a time to take a sabbatical; look within and strive for inner, spiritual growth. Today the moon continues its travel in Pisces, setting a laid-back pace. Create or appreciate art, music, poetry.

SUNDAY, APRIL 27

Storm clouds move in this morning. Keep it light; don't get caught up in negative, limited thinking. The Pisces moon forms challenging 90-degree contacts to Pluto and Saturn until 1:18 p.m., when it becomes inactive. At this time the moon travels at the tail end of the zodiac, making it a great period to kick back, veg out, get extra rest. An Aries moon at 9:54 p.m. brings an energy boost.

MONDAY, APRIL 28

This is a great day to get things done. An energetic Aries moon forms harmonious contacts to Mars, Venus and Jupiter. Make up a list of things to do, so that you are well-organized. Influences also rate high for working with people and socializing. Venus forms a flowing 120-degree contact to Jupiter, generating good feelings, and making this evening prime for partying.

TUESDAY, APRIL 29

An Aries moon continues to set a fast pace today. You can be most productive, if you stick to your game plan; don't get sidetracked. A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Jupiter continues to promote high spirits. On the other hand, you may be tempted to act on impulse. Avoid making decisions, purchases or promises today.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30

The dark side of a new moon is a time for letting go, cleaning out and finishing old business. Spend time alone. Nurture your spirit; meditate, listen to music, rest and unwind. At 2:12 a.m. the Aries moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. The final windup to the new moon begins at 10:26 a.m., when the moon enters Taurus. Slow down and avoid conflicts with others between 7:25-10:25 p.m., when the moon and Mars align.

Wired!

Burying wires to be included in village design

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Selectmen have taken their biggest step yet towards removing utility wires and poles from the streets of Cohasset Village.

The board decided Tuesday night to spend $12,800 for the Waterfield Design Group to design a village with buried wires. The money will also pay to explore feeding wires from behind homes and businesses on Elm Street below St. Stephen's Episcopal Church and from behind some South Main Street shops via the Town Parking Lot.

The decision came despite the fact that the state has not yet responded to the Town's request for a one-year extension of a $1.5 million grant that would pay for the majority of the project. Selectmen also remain unsure whether that grant can be used to pay for utility-related work.

A consensus on the need for additional design work from Waterfield was reached after a lengthy debate about the goals of the village revitalization project.

Local quilt-maker enjoying success

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Amy Robertson took her first quilting class in 1997 and she never looked back.

The former franchise lawyer of 20 years said there was no doubt the class had renewed her passion for art, but it also made focusing on her job more difficult.

"I started to have colored pencils next to my phone instead of a legal pad," she said. "It didn't take me long to realize (quilting) was something I wanted to do."

"We have this art form that people don't really recognize yet."
— Amy Robertson, Aaron River Road

Six years later, Roberston, who moved to Cohasset a year ago, has retired from practicing law, picked up a sewing machine and is carving a niche for herself in the quilting world. She has started to display and sell some of her work in quilt shows and was recently invited to headline at a show in Fort Collins, Colo. Add to that, Robertson is the chairwoman of the Quilters' Connection 26th Annual Quilt Show and Sale, to be held May 9 and 10 in Arlington.

In an interview last week from her home and studio on Aaron River Road, Roberston said quilting is an exciting art form that is often under-appreciated. "We have this art form that people don't really recognize yet," she said. "I just think it's a great medium and I want people to realize that."

Robertson said quilts are a great home decoration and can often provide variety to a homeowner looking for more than just a painting to hang on the wall. As one would imagine, Robertson's own home is a testament to that idea. The first floor walls are home to the original quilts that she made with the help of her former teacher and mentor, Louisa Smith of Walpole.

Roberston said it was Smith who took her under her wing and helped her develop her talent. "She liked my use of colors," she said.

One quilt that greets visitors just inside the front door of Robertson's home uses 250 different fabrics and incorporates a technique called "strip piecing." The piece is one example of what Robertson describes as her "collage-like" style. Unlike other quilters who might die or color their own material, Robertson uses the content of commercial prints to achieve her purpose.

"Every fabric is like another crayon and you want to have all the crayons," she said.

Robertson also likes to incorporate themes into her quilts. One quilt displayed in her home, she said, was supposed to capture the feeling of Africa,

Homework to study full-day kindergarten

Report due in 12 months

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Is full-day kindergarten in Cohasset's future?

It's too soon to tell, but a task force will soon be established to research the feasibility of starting such a program in Cohasset.

The School Committee recently gave the go-ahead for the study but have not committed to establishing the program. Plans are for the task force to report back to the School Committee in about a year's time.

Once the third grade moves up to the Deer Hill School as part of grade realignment in September '04, there would be room at Osgood for full-day kindergarten.

The concept is supported by the state Department of Education, which is encouraging full-day programs. But due to the state fiscal crisis, grant money to help school districts with transition planning for full-day programs is on hold.

With the bleak budget picture from the state expected to continue for the foreseeable future, the School Committee was understandably concerned about the cost of expanding the kindergarten program in town.

"The sense is the cost could be at such a level that it would not be feasible next year or the following year," School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo said. "Will the study be old when the economy improves?"

Curriculum coordinator Ruth Fennessey explained the program could be tuition-based, although that is an area the task force would also explore. It's also not clear if the full-day program would be district wide or offered on a voluntary basis using a lottery system to select participants.

Osgood School Principal Janet Sheehan said the addition of full-day kindergarten is a trend throughout the state and country. And the statistics say she's correct.

According to Early Education For All, a campaign to meet the early childhood education needs of Massachusetts children, nearly 70,000 children are enrolled in public school kindergarten programs in the state and of that, 48 percent are in full-day kindergarten classes.

In a telephone interview this week, Sheehan said one of the long-term goals of the Osgood School Improvement Plan is to look into a full-day program for kindergarten. Annual School Improvement Plans created by School Councils, made up of administrators, teachers, and parents, are required under the

All meetings are at Town Hall unless posted otherwise.

Dept. of corrections

A story in last week's Cohasset Mariner about police firearms training should have said Officer Rick Grassie and not Det. Grassie. Officer Grassie, a former detective, is the police prosecutor. The Mariner regrets the error.

A story in last week's Mariner incorrectly reported that a state grant to pay for the downtown revitalization project must be spent by June 30, 2003. The grant must be spent by June 30, 2004.

Affordable housing plan takes center stage

Rick Swanborg, chairman of the Growth & Development Committee, will present an overview of the Affordable Housing Plan at 8 p.m.. at Tuesday's Selectmen's meeting. The Affordable Housing Plan is part of the overall Housing Plan in the Master Plan. Draft copies are available at Town Hall at the Selectmen's Office and Town Clerk's Office.

Water plant's 25th anniversary

All Cohasset residents are invited to the 25th Anniversary Ceremony at 1 p.m. on May 11 to commemorate the 25th year of operation of the Aaron River Reservoir and the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant.

"On May 11, 1978, Cohasset residents ended years of summer watering bans and water shortages," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission. "During the past 25 years we have had the benefit a vast water resource, the 323 million gallon capacity Aaron River Reservoir, that is the envy of other cities and towns."

Special recognition will be made at the event to former town officials and others who helped with the long process to build the teservoir and treatment plant, and to former Water Commissioners, said McNabb.

The anniversary ceremony will be held on the Aaron River Dam, which residents can get to by parking at the end of Beechwood Street or on Aaron River Road.

Hazardous waste collection planned

On Saturday, May 31 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Hull and Cohasset will conduct a combined Household Hazardous Products Collection, at the MDC Parking Lot, Rockland House Road, Hull. Proof of residency required. Thermometer swap! Turn in your toxic mercury thermometer for a free digital one while supply lasts. Bring in chemicals in original or labeled containers. Call 781-925-1207 for information.

Burning season ends

The open burning season ends today, May 1.

Flag depository at American Legion

The American Legion, George H. Mealy Post 118 in Cohasset has a way for the public to be able to bring them their tattered and worn flags so they may be properly and ceremoniously destroyed. The Flag Depository, located in front of the legion post at 98 Summer St., has the look and shape of an American flag. This solid metal Flag Depository protects the flags until they are removed for storage and kept until the time of the desecration ceremony. The Herb Chambers Automobile Dealerships made this service possible through a donation to the post. Everyone is invited to bring his or her retired flags to the depository.

Free legal clinic

Do you have a legal question or are you confused about a legal issue? The Bar Association of Norfolk County is sponsoring free legal clinics as a public service to the community. A panel of attorneys experienced in all areas of the law will be available for a one on one consultation with you to discuss your legal questions.

All consultations are strictly confidential. The evening legal clinics will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. on Tuesday evenings at the Quincy District Court on the following dates: June 3, July 1.

For further information, contact Adrienne C. Clarke, Bar Association of Norfolk County at 617-471-9693.

Open Space seeks some new members

The Open Space Advisory Committee is seeking several new members. The committee is responsible for implementing recommendations in the Open Space Plan, including identifying properties to conserve that will protect Cohasset's water supply, wetlands, wildlife habitats and scenic resources. The committee will also be working on other recommendations in the plan including greater opportunities for walking and bicycling, improved access to the waterfront, and access to recreational resources for the disabled. Recently, many members worked on the Barnes property acquisition.

The committee welcomes new members who are prepared to "roll up their sleeves" and make a difference. If you are interested in learning more, please contact Debbie Cook at 781-383-6313 or cookmc@attbi.com

Arbor Day walk

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will host an Arbor Day celebration on Saturday, April 26 at 10 a.m.. President Sally Avery and Conservation Chairman Meg Moore will lead a walk through the new Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary identifying trees and plant communities. All those interested in joining Avery and Moore should meet at the Wheelwright Park, North Main Street entrance parking lot at 10 a.m..

Water Dept. is one of best in state

On National Drinking Water Day, May 8, the Cohasset Water Department will be honored in a ceremony to be held at the Massasoit Community College Conference Center for its efforts to provide a safe, clean drinking water supply to its customers.

The Cohasset Water Department will receive a Massachusetts Public Water System Award, which annually recognizes community water suppliers for their outstanding performance in several key areas of operation.

"We are very pleased that we have been recognized as one of the top 10 percent water systems in the state, as we prepare to commemorate the 25th Anniversary of the Aaron River Reservoir on May 11," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. "This award was made possible because of the daily commitment of our Water Superintendent, George Hawksley, and the other employees of our contract operator, American Water, to provide quality water service to the people of Cohasset, and because of the support of the Selectmen, Town Manager, and other town officials and residents."

This award is co-sponsored by the Massachusetts Drinking Water Committee which is comprised of the Department of Environmental Protection, Environmental Protection Agency Region 1, Massachusetts Water Works Association, Northeast Rural Water Association, New England Water Works Association, Plymouth County Water Works Association, Barnstable County Water Utilities Association, and RHI The Northeast Rural Community Assistance Program.

The award program acknowledges the challenges faced by suppliers in complying with the Safe Drinking Water Act, and recognized outstanding performance in providing customers with clean, dependable drinking water. The 768 community and nontransient-noncommunity water systems in the state are annually rated for their compliance with drinking water regulations, their source protection and distribution programs, and their administrative quality, including timely submission of plans and reports, certification of operators and community outreach activities.T he Awards program used all currently available electronic reporting compliance data to determine the overall compliance ranking of each system. All community (COM) public water systems (PWS) and non-transient non-community public water systems (NTNC) were rated on an electronic point system based on compliance with regulations and the system's historical compliance profile. In addition, independent efforts undertaken by the system in their response time to regulatory issues were also considered.

Hingham passenger injured in crash

Driver charged with OUI

The front of the 2001 Chevrolet pickup after it struck the stone wall at Black Rock Beach on Monday night.

Cohasset Police say the combination of speed and alcohol caused a single-car accident Monday night that resulted in a 25-year-old Hingham man being airlifted to Boston Medical Center where he underwent surgery for serious injuries sustained in the crash.

Jeffrey Paul, 24, of 25 Butler Road in Hingham, who was a passenger in the 2001 Chevrolet pickup truck has multiple broken bones, facial injuries and internal injuries, Sgt. William Quigley said. He is expected to survive, police said.

Officer William English arrested the driver, Andrew Collins, 25, of 62 Mountford Road in Hull, who sustained minor injuries, at the scene. Collins was transported to South Shore Hospital in Weymouth where there was no information available on his condition.

Collins was arraigned Monday in Quincy District Court on the charges of operating under the influence (alcohol), operating under the influence causing serious bodily injury, operating to endanger, and speeding.

Police received multiple 911 calls for a report of a serious motor vehicle accident at about 10:20 p.m. Monday at the foot of Forest Avenue near the intersection of Jerusalem Road.

Police and fire units were dispatched to the scene. On arrival officers found the driver of the truck had apparently lost control of the vehicle and ran head-on into the sea wall at Black Rock Beach, Quigley said.

The accident is under investigation. Alcohol and speeding

Four larcenies take place around noontime Monday

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Thanks to an eyewitness and quick police work, a suspect in two of four larcenies that all occurred around noontime Monday has been apprehended.

Police think Scott Driscoll, 37, of Brockton may also be responsible for a larceny at Sandcastles Daycare but there was no physical evidence at the time he was arrested to tie him to that incident.

A witness at Esposito's nursery, 585 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, where Driscoll allegedly stole several hundred dollars in cash, was able to give police the license plate number and a description of the car, which were provided to surrounding towns and the state police.

Two of the other larcenies — one from Sandcastles and one from Buttonwood Books — were also reported at about the same time when the alleged victims, who were employees at the businesses, discovered a pocketbook and two wallets were missing.

At just before 2 p.m., state police out of Norwell called Cohasset to report troopers stopped the car near Queen Ann's Corner. The witness was able to make a positive identification, Det. Garrett Hunt said. Driscoll had $400 in cash on his person, and in searching the vehicle, police found contents of the pocketbook belonging to an employee at Buttonwood.

Driscoll was arraigned on charges of larceny from a building, larceny over $250 and receiving stolen property Tuesday in Quincy District Court. According a court spokesman, Driscoll is being held on $1,500 cash bail at the Dedham House of Correction and is due back in court on May 22.

Police say the suspect in a fourth larceny does not fit Driscoll's description. At about noon Monday, a caller reported she discovered her debit card and cash missing after she returned from a walk in Whitney Thayer Woods.

This notice warns visitors at Whitney Thayer Woods not to leave valuables in their vehicles. Police say Driscoll is not the suspect in a larceny from a vehicle parked there on Monday.

The alleged victim told police she put her pocketbook under the front passenger seat and returned to her car at about 11:30 a.m. She didn't discover her debit card and cash were missing until she went to buy lunch in North Scituate. She called her bank and was told a card had been used for upwards of $225 at Stop & Shop in Cohasset within just the last 15 minutes.

Officer Lawrence Ainslie interviewed the Stop & Shop clerk, who took the debit card, and described the suspect as being about 45 years old, average height, having short hair and being clean shaven, but having a dirty appearance. The suspect also had a missing front tooth and was wearing a waist-length red nylon baseball-type jacket.

Due to a number of larcenies from vehicles at that location, Cohasset police have posted signs at the Whitney Thayer Woods parking lot warning walkers not to leave valuables in their cars.

Trial is postponed again

Cohasset judge recuses himself from the case

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The trial of school business manager Ivan Klimko was postponed Tuesday at Hingham District Court after a Cohasset judge recused himself from the case. The trial has been rescheduled for June 5.

According to the District Attorney's office, Judge Thomas Barrett, who lives at 42 Sohier St., recused himself but did not make written findings as to why. A phone call to Barrett from the Mariner was not returned.

Klimko is charged with assault and battery with a deadly weapon stemming from an alleged dispute with his wife at their Hull home on Dec. 3.

Klimko's lawyer, Andrew LaPointe, would not comment on his client's case.

Assistant District Attorney Bridget Middleton declined to comment on whether any plea bargains had been offered by the defense. "The Commonwealth is looking for a guilty verdict and we're looking for jail time," she said.

House cuts deeper than first thought

Slashes local aid

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Reading budget proposals often means reading between the lines.

Last week, as the Mariner went to press on Wednesday, Town Finance Director Michael Buckley estimated the House version of the state budget cut some $60,000 deeper into Cohasset's local aid than Gov. Mitt Romney's budget.

Buckley was still in the process of trying to figure out if a $50,000 reimbursement for school bus transportation was included in the House budget. The reimbursement was cut by Romney, but Buckley said at first glance, it appeared the House budget had preserved it.

As it turns out, it did not. That means the House budget actually slashed about $110,000 more from the town's local aid than Romney's budget, for a total cut of about 15 percent or $417,000. Romney's budget cut only 10.9 percent or $307,000.

"We don't know what they're going to do. It still has to go through the Senate."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Town officials used local aid figures from Romney's budget when they put together the operating budget in March. If the House budget were adopted as is, the Town would have to make up a $110,000 deficit.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told Selectmen on Tuesday night that trying to balance the budget now would be premature. "It's way too early to address (the state budget) now," Haddad said. "We don't know what they're going to do. It still has to go through the Senate."

Haddad reiterated that he was constantly exploring new ways to generate additional savings, particularly by lessening the amount the amount that the Town spends on health insurance for its employees. He is also asking individual departments to examine their own budgets for potential savings.

Haddad warned Selectmen that the House budget, unlike Romney's budget, failed to add $20 million of new funding to the state's school building assistance program. The move would indefinitely postpone reimbursement for Cohasset's two new schools, which together cost about $46 million.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris suggested Selectmen send a letter to the Governor expressing the need for addition funding for school building assistance. McMorris urged residents to write the Governor on that topic, too.

Buckley said last week he was still optimistic that in the final state budget, Cohasset would see a cut in local aid lower than what the House budget proposed. "The budget still has to go through the Senate, and they're generally nicer to the cities and towns, so no need to jump yet," he said.

Haddad said the Town has until October, when the tax rate needs to be set, to balance its operating budget. "There's been times we haven't gotten a cherry sheet from the state until September, so that's why I'm not in panic mode," he said.

Local aid makes up about eight percent of Cohasset's operating budget.

Water Commission challenges Avalon on another front

Thinks project needs to file NOI

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

"If you're adding 26,000 gallons a day to a wetland that's never had that, particularly in the summertime, that's got to have an impact."
— Mark Bartlett, Norfolk Ram Group

Could the Conservation Commission have jurisdiction over Avalon? At least one town board thinks so.

The Water Commission is arguing that, because wastewater and storm water from the planned 200-unit apartment complex would allegedly alter nearby wetlands, the developer, Avalon Bay Estates, must file a Notice of Intent under the Wetlands Protection Act.

The notice, if deemed necessary, would require Avalon Bay to provide detailed plans to the Conservation Commission on the proposed development's storm-water and wastewater management plan. The Conservation Commission could then place "orders of condition" on the plan or potentially require Avalon Bay to arrange for a hydrology study of how wetlands might potentially be impacted.

The Water Commission appeared before the Conservation Commission last Thursday night to argue its case, as representatives from Avalon Bay looked on. The dispute centered around Avalon's main storm-water and wastewater discharge point, where treated effluent would flow downhill into nearby wetlands.

Avalon Bay estimates the discharge system would release an average of 26,000 gallons of treated wastewater each day. The detention pond that holds the effluent prior to its release would be just outside the 100-foot wetlands "buffer zone" established by the Wetlands Protection Act.

The specific wetlands the effluent would eventually flow into is the subject of another dispute between Avalon Bay and the Water Commission. The developer says it would enter the Weir River watershed, but the Water Commission says it would end up in the Lily Pond Watershed and thereby threaten the town's water supply.

That debate aside, John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission, told the Conservation Commission there is no doubt the effluent would alter wetlands, which, he said, requires the filing of a Notice of Intent. McNabb said he was acting on the advice of Town Counsel.

Mark Bartlett, an engineer from the Norfolk Ram Group, a firm contracted by the Water Commission, reaffirmed McNabb's position. "If you're adding 26,000 gallons a day to a wetland that's never had that, particularly in the summertime, that's got to have an impact," he said.

Avalon Bay representatives disputed the Water Commission's interpretation of the law that would require the filing of the Notice of Intent.

David Kelly, an engineer contracted by Avalon Bay, cited state law that said because the discharge system was outside the "buffer zone," it did not require filing of a Notice of Intent "unless and until" it was proved the effluent would alter the protected wetlands.

Scott Dale, vice president of development, said the Avalon Bay was well aware of its obligation to comply with the Wetlands Protection Act. He referred to a meeting in January when Avalon Bay received a Resource Area Delineation from the Conservation Commission so that it could plan the location of the wastewater and storm water discharge system that is now under question.

The Conservation Commission ultimately decided it would wait to determine whether a Notice of Intent was required because Avalon Bay is still considering alternative wastewater plans.

Chairman Debbie Cook said there was "a very good likelihood" that "if the plan stands as is," Avalon Bay would have to file a Notice of Intent. But at least one commission member, Jim Dedes, thought more information on the current plan would be needed.

After the meeting, Dale declined to comment on whether Avalon Bay had yet developed any alternative wastewater systems. Dale said such plans, if feasible, would be discussed at Avalon Bay's next meeting with the Zoning Board of Appeals on May 20.

Already, Avalon Bay has attempted to run a wastewater pipe through Whitney Woods, a plan that was rejected by the Trustees of Reservations, the group that owns that land.

Dale said the Whitney Woods plan was intended to move the wastewater discharge point "further down into the (Weir River) drainage basin, where there was no question of flow."

TOP SWIMMERS

Another bit of news coming our way from the Kissick family is about Jake Kisseck. He is 10-years-old and got asked to represent New England in a swim meet for the East Coast. The top two swimmers of each age group in each event were picked to represent New England in New Jersey against all the other top East Coast teams and swimmers. He finished second, third and fourth in all of the freestyle events, which is incredible! Jake swims year round for the South Shore Strypers and also joins the Cohasset Swim Team in the summer. Jake is ranked 19th nationally. Jake's sister Hope also swims and is ranked fourth in the 8-and-under category of this region for overall swimming. Coleman, the youngest brother, is only 6 but swims faster than either of the other two did at the same age! What a talented family of "fish!" Keep up the great swimming.

Liz Mitterando, almost 2, holds her new baby brother, David.

DUCK DERBY

The Our World Global Children's Discovery Museum will host the first annual Driftway Duck Derby on Sunday May 4 from 3 to 5 at Driftway Park in Scituate. Toy ducks (that have been purchased for $5 per duck from various locations such as Buttonwoods Books and Springbrook Toys) will be launched from James Landing and float to the park where the winning numbers will be awarded fabulous prizes including $100 gift certificate to Ocean Song spa in Scituate, kids' remote control boats, razor scooters, restaurant certificates from Rivas and Eat Well Corp. and more! So for a $5 investment there are some great prizes. It should be a fun day for families as well to come watch and pray for sun.

Ten-year-old Zoe Ovans, a Scituate fourth-grader, won the Driftway Duck Derby T-shirt design contest. Her design will appear of T-shirts sold on Derby Day, May 4 from 3-5 p.m. in Scituate. Proceeds will benefit the Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum in Cohasset. With Zoe are the event's co-chairs Patty Smith of Cohasset, center, and Jenn Chamberlain of Scituate. Derby entry forms are available at Buttonwood Books.

SUPPORT CHS BASEBALL

The Cohasset High School Baseball team will be involved with fundraisers for the next two weekends. They will sell bumper stickers at the Little League Opening Day Ceremonies on Saturday, May 3, for $3 each or two for $5. The following day, Sunday, the team will be available to help unload cars at the Recycling Transfer Facility and accepting donations at the gate. On Saturday, May 10, (weather permitting), the baseball players will be at George Roukounakis' Olympic Citco ready to wash cars! The Diamond Club is hoping to raise enough money to buy equipment needed to rebuild the baseball program at Cohasset High School. Please call 383-9857 or 383-9131 with any questions.

DIVERSITY COMMITTEE

The Cohasset PSO Diversity Committee will hold an informational meeting open to all Cohasset residents on Monday, May 12 from 7-8 p.m. at The Paul Pratt Library in the meeting room. Please call Allison Moskow at 383-9242 or Katherine Earle at 383-9937 for more information.

As many families in town know, this Saturday is the Little League parade and start of the season for many players. Play ball.!

That is all for this week. Please get me all your news and information no later than Mondays at noon.

Signups to start June 9 for Children's Drama Workshop

This year, the program has been extended to seven weeks and performances are scheduled for Tuesday, Aug. 5 at 10 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. and Wednesday, Aug. 6 at 1 p.m. and 7:30 p.m..

In celebration of its 15th anniversary, the Children's Drama Workshop (CDW) presents an original musical comedy called "Jack Beanstalk." Jack, a handsome, well-rounded young boy has spent his family's savings and is forced to sell the family cow to the Man of the Woods in exchange for magic beans. A beanstalk grows and Jack ascends to a new world where he befriends a slew of quirky characters determined to help him slay their Giant and win the great treasure in the sky. But they bid him warning to beware of The Mad Cow! ("He's crazy! He's just crazy!")

Come and meet Fairybell, The Stalker Sisters, The Mexican Jumping Beans, Lenny Henny, Henry J. Harp and all of Jack's friends as they sing and dance their way down the trail to the Giant.

Rehearsals for "Jack Beanstalk" will be held Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday afternoons from 1 to 3 p.m. beginning Tuesday, June 24 at the brand new, (air-conditioned!) Deer Hill School Auditorium. This year, the program has been extended to seven weeks and performances are scheduled for Tuesday, Aug. 5 at 10 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. and Wednesday, Aug. 6 at 1 p.m. and 7:30 p.m..

Registration for "Jack Beanstalk" begins Monday, June 9 at 9 a.m. All children between the ages of 5 and 14 are welcome. Early registration is advisable as enrollment is strictly limited. The cost is $440 per child. Children enrolled in the Cohasset Playground Program receive a $30 discount. Checks can be made payable to "CDW." For further information, please contact the Cohasset Recreation Department at (781) 383-4109.

"Jack Beanstalk" is the 15th production directed by CDW founders, Elizabeth, Grace and Sara Deveney of Cohasset. CDW past hits include Monsters, Inc. (2002), The Little Mermaid (2001), Cinderella Smith (2000), and The Lion King (1999).

Rowing registration May 4

Save the date! On Sunday, May 4, the Cohasset Maritime Institute is holding its 2003 summer season rowing program registration at the boat house at the rear of 40 Parker Ave. Registration will take place from noon to 2p.m.. Materials and sign-up forms for students and adults of all skill levels will be available. Please park at the Cohasset Lightkeepers' Residence.

CMI is are also pleased to present a special clinic to introduce its members to Alden double and single rowing. Attend the instructional clinic; come learn technique and club protocols from an Alden "pro". The clinic will be held at 10 a.m.. Participation will be limited to members. Please e-mail Lisa Hewitt Dick at lmhewitt@attbi.com if you would like to take part in the program .

Lighting the way for a cure to cancer

Luminaria ceremony is main event at Relay

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Lining a road or a walkway with lit candles in paper bags is almost always a beautiful sight.

But when each of those bags is graced with the name of someone who is suffering from, has died from, or has survived cancer, it becomes an emotional and symbolic act that has unparalleled power.

That's the idea behind the luminaria ceremony at the upcoming Relay for Life, May 16 at the Cohasset High School. The overnight walkathon, held in towns across the country, generates millions of dollars for the American Cancer Society.

Event organizers say the luminaria ceremony is by far the most powerful and emotional part of the relay. Candles and bags are purchased in exchange for a $5 contribution. Participants can write the names of loved ones who have fought cancer on the bags, which are then arranged alphabetically around the high school track.

As the sun sets on the night of the relay, participants light the candles while they circle the track. At 9 p.m., a moment of silence is held, and then a bagpiper leads everyone in a procession.

For Jacqui Vitello, who has participated in the Relay for Life for five years, the luminaria ceremony has a special meaning. Six years ago, her father, Robert Goyette, who was suffering from cancer at the time, went to the ceremony and returned singing its praises. But Vitello never got the change to experience the Relay for Life with her father. He passed away later that year.

Vitello now uses the Relay for Life, and particularly the luminaria ceremony, to remember her father. "It gives me the chills almost," she said. "To me, it's the most touching part of the event. It's also important for my daughter, too."

Vitello's four-year-old daughter never knew her grandfather, but now each year she dedicates a candle to him. Vitello also lights a candle for her mother-in-law, a cancer survivor.

Anna Mary Stewart has been involved with the Relay for Life in different towns on the South Shore for about 10 years. She has helped organize the Cohasset relay since it began six years ago.

"It's said that if you go to the luminaria ceremony, you want to go back the next year because it gives you this feeling of hope," Stewart said. She noted that last year's luminaria ceremony was a literal display of hope. Participants used luminaria bags to spell the word "hope" on the bleachers alongside the high school track.

Stewart estimated that more than 3,000 luminarias were sold last year. "Nowadays, there isn't one single person out there who isn't affected by cancer, either through a relative or someone they know," she said.

Stewart said the importance of the luminaria ceremony really hit home with her a few years ago with when thunderstorms threatened the event. "People just carried all the bags into the gym and set them up in a great huge circle," she said. "I was astounded...That was when I realized this thing was really the main part of the whole event."

The luminaria ceremony is followed by the survivor's lap, which celebrates those who have beaten cancer.

"Every ceremony touches people in a different way, even though we're all here for the same reason—to beat this thing and to find a cure," said Vitello.

Stewart was confident that a cure for cancer would be found. "There has to be something out there they could do. They just haven't found it yet," she said.

The Relay for Life begins at 3 p.m. on Friday, May 16 and runs until noon the next day. For more information or to purchase a luminaria, please call Jacqui Vitello at 781-383-2668.

Luminarias may also be purchased during regular business hours at Pilgrim Cooperative Bank of Cohasset, 48 South Main St.; at Sovereign Bank, 380 Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Route 3A); or at the Relay for Life on May 16.

and another, the Middle East. "It gives them a bit of a story line to grab onto," she said.

Robertson finds new prints everywhere from fabric and quilt stores to an Internet auction site, www.ebay.com. She has collected hundreds and hundreds of different patterns, most of them arranged by color and stored in a room in her basement. "This is my stash," she said during a tour of the home.

Robertson estimates she has made about 130 quilts since she took up the art form six years ago. She has sold between 10 and 15 of them. "A lot of them are beginning efforts that I'd be embarrassed to even show and then some of them are a little too precious to get rid of," she said.

The upcoming Quilters' Connection Quilt Show and Sale, which Robertson is chairing, will feature more than 150 quilts, including two of her own. Guided tours of the show will be available, and some quilting techniques will be demonstrated. Robertson said that 25 percent of the quilts displayed will be for sale.

"Even if a quilt isn't for sale, very often a quilt-maker will take a commission to make something similar to it," she said.

Robertson said working on commission demands cooperation and flexibility from both the customer and the quilter. Robertson personally sticks to a motto that she repeated several times during the tour of her home: "Good art doesn't have to match the sofa."

As an undergraduate, Robertson majored in Art History. Her newfound career has given the former lawyer the sense that her life has come full-circle. "I feel like I got back on my path. I took this big, 20-year detour," she said.

Robertson said her "ultimate goal" was to someday open a quilt gallery that doubled as a quilting school. She said Cohasset seemed like a good fit for the project. "It seems like it would be a wonderful place to do something like that," she said. "It's a very artsy community."

For now, Robertson will hold onto her second story studio space in her home, overlooking the Aaron River Reservoir, a view that she says gives her inspiration for her work.

The Quilters' Connection Quilt Show will be held May 9 and 10 at the First Parish Unitarian Universalist Church, 630 Massachusetts Ave., Arlington Center. Hours are Friday 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. and Saturday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Crafts made easy

New store offers simple solution

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Price of a project for your kids if you get materials at a crafts store: $20.

Price of doing the same project at The Craft Factory: $10.

Spending quality time with your children: priceless.

That's the thought process that Maria Dinwoodie imagined when she decided to start her business, The Craft Factory, which opened in Jonathan Livingston Plaza on Route 3A in December. At this store, crafts are made simple, and you can leave your mess behind.

The Craft Factory offers a place where kids can indulge in a selection of 60 crafts projects, with materials and instruction provided, all for between $2 and $13 each. Projects cater to children from ages four to 11.

Specific projects at The Craft Factory range from pencils boxes to hand-painted tote bags to decorated cork boards. Aprons, bracelets, banners, flower pots, foam gliders, race cars and yo-yos can also be made, and that's just a small share of all that's offered.

"I try to do a lot of projects that are functional — something that the kids can actually do something with," said Dinwoodie, who lives in Scituate. "The nice thing is you can come in and do the projects and leave the mess here."

Dinwoodie said before opening The Craft Factory she spent two years brainstorming about different businesses that involved children. She thought about opening a children's museum but abandoned the idea after learning that the One World Children's Discovery Museum would soon be opening alongside the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Dinwoodie settled on the idea for The Craft Factory after realizing how much money she was spending on crafts for her own children. "I think we overspend in the crafts store for projects our kids do," she said.

Dinwoodie explained that between paints, brushes, paper and other materials, one simple craft project could end up costing more than $20, but would result in a surplus of materials that would never be used. The Craft Factory, she said, offers an less expensive solution by pricing crafts according to the exact materials needed for each project.

More importantly, Dinwoodie said, the store offers a place where parents can spend quality time with their children. "It forces you to engage with your children and be creative," she said.

Birthday parties and other children's celebrations make up a large portion of The Craft Factory's business. Dinwoodie said the store had hosted 65 parties since opening, including 21 in the month of March alone. She hopes walk-in business will pick up in the summer months.

"Our walk-in business has been slow but it's been picking up in the past month," she said. "I think it's because people are starting to realize we're here."

The store's "Drop-in Studio" is open Tuesday to Friday, 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Saturday, 12 p.m. to 5 p.m. Aside from doing crafts, children can paint using a wide selection of colors and stamps with different designs. Frequent visitors can join the Craft Club, where they receive a free craft for every eight crafts purchased.

From time to time, Dinwoodie also offers craft workshops, where a specific craft that might require more instruction is completed over a longer period. This summer, Dinwoodie plans to develop five, week-long workshops, where children of similar age groups will visit The Craft Factory for one or two hours a day. One of the workshops, she said, will teach kids how to build models volcanoes that actually erupt.

Dinwoodie left her previous career in e-commerce to start her new business. She said she is enjoying life as an entrepreneur and is organizing a group of local women business owners so they can meet and exchange ideas about marketing and business practices. So far, Dinwoodie is happy with the career change.

"For me, it's a very rewarding thing," she said.

For more information, an updated list of summer workshops and a complete listing of crafts offered at The Craft Factory, visit www.thecraftfactory.com.

Lightkeepers to host Memorial Day cookout

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation is pleased to invite everyone for hamburgers, hot dogs, soft drinks or coffee immediately following the Memorial Day Parade on May 26, at Bancroft Hall on Government Island.

The non-profit Lightkeepers Corporation was established in 1991 to renovate a former two-family lightkeepers' residence, no longer used as such because of automation of Minot's Light, and convert it into a function room for community use. The building is leased from the town but maintained and operated by the Lightkeepers Corporation. The generosity of Cohasset residents and others provided the funds for renovation. Operating and maintenance expenses, and reserves for capital replacements or improvements, are recovered from rental of two apartments on the second floor, and from fees charged to non-residents for use of the function room facilities. Cohasset residents may use the facilities for a nominal fee, and non-profit organizations at no charge.

This will be the seventh year (2003) that CLC has hosted Memorial Day attendees in recognition of the generosity of our supporters and we expect to serve over 1200 people again.

OPINION

Affordable Housing

Public transportation and affordable housing have something in common: no one questions the need, but where and how are subjects for debate.

Like the train, many don't want affordable housing (which can mean higher density housing) in their backyard.

Still others confuse "affordable" housing with "government" housing, which conjures up images of federally subsidized, high rises in the inner city.

The Growth & Development Committee has been burning the midnight oil coming up with a new Master Plan for the town, an important component of which is the Affordable Housing Plan.

Committee Chairman Rick Swanborg will present an overview of the Affordable Housing Plan at 8 p.m. during Tuesday's selectmen's meeting.

This is an important meeting to either attend or to watch on Cable-TV.

It is common knowledge that Cohasset has too little affordable housing by state standards and therefore is vulnerable to the comprehensive permit process under the now infamous "Chapter 40B," which is the state's affordable housing law. Having too little affordable housing opened the door, which Avalon Bay then walked through. The company is seeking a comprehensive permit to build a 200-unit apartment complex at which about 25 percent would be affordable off Route 3A. The proposed development has alarmed some in town who fear it will stress town services while doing little to solve the affordable housing problem.

Our neighbors, Scituate and Hingham, are flooded with 40-B proposals from developers.

Clearly the best way to develop affordable housing that won't overwhelm services is to take control of the process. The first step on the road to accomplish that is through adoption of an Affordable Housing Plan.

Under new 40B rules, towns with a state-approved plan can deny a comprehensive permit application without fear that the developer would appeal the denial. In order for the plan to be accepted by the state, a town must prove it would create three-quarters of 1 percent of affordable housing per year. That would mean 21 new units annually in Cohasset.

It's a tall order, but the alternative is unacceptable. The town does not want to continue to be vulnerable to 40B developments.

One of the suggestions would be a zoning change allowing apartments by right on the upper floors of the downtown business district. Amnesty for illegal apartments provided they were made affordable is also on the table; along with streamlining the accessory dwelling process in return for affordability contracts. Exploring inclusionary zoning and establishing a Cohasset Housing Partnership will also be explained.

Copies of the draft Affordable Housing Plan are available at the Selectmen's office and the Town Clerk's office at Town Hall.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Rebuts Rivkind on the train facts

TO THE EDITOR:

This is in repsonse to Ralph Rivkind's letter in last week's paper. Mr. Rivkind is head of Greenbush On Track.

Attorney Rivkind is simply misleading about relative Greenbush rail costs. State transportation capital projects have historically been measured by the Central Transportation Planning Staff as the ratio of the incremental capital costs of a project to the added capacity they bring – the number of new weekday transit trips. At a capital cost of $464 million for 1708 new transit riders on Greenbush, the Greenbush cost is $271,000 per new rider; alternatively, this is 3416 new weekday transit trips, for a cost of $135,831 per new transit trip. This compares, for instance, with the Blue Line extension to Lynn that was projected to cost $275 million and attract 4860 new weekday trips for a cost of $56,600 per new transit trip. You do the math and draw your own conclusions on who is manipulating numbers.

School systems and highways are similarly measured by the addition to their capacities in terms of number of new users. It is often impossible to determine accurately the total number of users over the many year life of a project, for example how many years a school will last or how many students will populate the schools each and every year. That is why incremental capacity is used. Other cost-effectiveness measures can be used as well - for impacts on travel time saved or total annual trips; but they measure basic increments to capacity.

The results for Greenbush will be similar when it is compared with other alternatives. Rep. Garrett Bradley was right on the money at the Corps hearing. The fact remains that Greenbush is simply much more expensive than the alternatives or other transit improvement projects that will serve far more people at far less cost.

John Bewick
President
Advocates for Transportation Alternatives

Why we should support Greenbush

The Greenbush train appears to have been put on hold, if not on the shelf. This concerns the South Shore commuting public and, of course, the transportation-handicapped.

The necessary negotiations of vital hurdles even so have almost reached a satisfactory status with the five immediate towns involved with the MBTA contributing much in funds and community assistance to the substantial demands of these five.

One must realize, too, that the restoration of this line will benefit not only Braintree, Weymouth; Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate, but also the four contiguous areas of Hull, Marshfield, Norwell and a portion of Duxbury. Imagine, nine coastal communities the beneficiaries of just 18 miles of rail!

And note also, the National Audubon and the Sierra organizations along with the Massachusetts Conservational Law Foundation endorse the project, even as it traverses federally protected wetlands - as the right-of-way did previously for some 100 years.

The MBTA currently subsidizes 12 other connecting commuter lines serving the North of Boston, the West of Boston, the popular boats from Hingham and Quincy, and six other boats with passengers within Boston Harbor, itself.

Options for the South Shore have not only been long disregarded, but our exasperated hoards have been relegated to the diesel-fumed, accident-prone, mentally-stressed maelstrom of stop-an-go trailers, trucks, buses and one-passenger vehicles the latter forced into shocking parking rates in town, when even available.

It is a delight to note that:

1. Funds for Greenbush have been voted and programmed. Awaiting only is the resolution of soma residual mitigation, and a green light from Governor Romney, and
2. The Plymouth and Middleborough branches are eminently successful, (20 percent above original predictions) and constantly in need of additional parking spaces.
4. Further prospective bonuses for the South Shore neglected commuters would be:

1. Proposed fares less than the bus and water routes,
2. The driving done by skilled engineers,
3. On-schedule trains with comfortable seating, and
4. Departure from home and arrival back at rational hours.

Greenbush hopefuls should keep their courage up, and their entreaties vocal.

TV programs are a big turnoff

ON THE BRIGHT SIDE

JEANE DALY

What is going on with women today? Are they really that desperate to get a man that they will go on national television and behave like imbeciles?

One evening as I was channel surfing I noticed my usually lightening-quick thumb movements had slowed down to a click, a 10-second pause, then and an even longer pause before following my next commands. I have been overworking the poor baby in an attempt to escape from one terrible TV show, to the next, and on to the next. But I must say by far, the most pitiful show I happened upon was, The Bachelor.

What is going on with women today? Are they really that desperate to get a man that they will go on national television and behave like imbeciles? The Bachelor, a now type of guy, whose favorite sport was bed hopping, had many eager and willing partners to frolic with.

He had a vocabulary of a twit: "You are incredible. The sky is incredible. Your eyes are incredible. The horse is incredible," and so on.

You get the picture, I'm sure.

The first bachelor's mom, a marriage counselor, gave her son a good piece of advice: "junior, get to at least know the girl first before saying I do."

He did just that by asking the finalist, Miss Moonstruck, to give up her job, move from her state to his and live together, sooo they could really get acquainted. Lucky girl! She thought she was — so what do I know?

Next, we have the entertainment industry awards: The Academy Awards, The Tony's, The Golden Globe, The MTV Awards, The People's Choice Awards, The Country Music Awards, and the list goes on and on.

Now I have a great idea. Wouldn't it be nice if people have an Ordinary Schmoe affair? It could be called the Average Human Being's Awards Dinner.

The menu would read; beans and franks, raisin brown bread with real butter, and all the coffee and tea you can drink. Dessert, a rich chocolate sheet cake that reads, "To The Very Best — You Know Who you are." I'm sure it would be a huge success and could be an annual affair in every home, office, or church basement throughout the world. And best of all, no one would have to deal with pesty news media or boisterous fans. Nothing beats being just average.

After a night of watching The Bachelor and other mindless things my thumb and I decided not to watch the boob tube for 12 days. The absence of Award Dinners, tiresome commercials, drug busts, murders and mayhem, etc. gave my weary mind a rest.

Like an idiot, curiosity got the best of me, and day 13 I clicked on the power and found nothing had changed. What graced my screen was The 56th Annual Tony Awards, click! Next, Looking for Love: Bachelorettes in Alaska, the rejects from the Bachelor show. They must have hopped a plane to Alaska to see what the pickins' were up there. You guessed it — the thumb took over and clicked the off button.

Getting to the bottom of town's catch basins and storm drains

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

April 22 was Earth Day. Generally, it's a time to send the troops out to help clean up our paths, roadways, etc., of debris left over from the winter. This year, we decided, as a part of our initiative to begin to manage the storm-water entering our estuaries, ponds and streams, to begin paying attention to storm-water structures like catch basins and street drains, since they do much of the collection of debris.

Each spring, the DPW sends a truck to selected catch basins and storm drains and with a device called a clamshell, empties them of accumulated silt and debris. A part of our storm-water program is to identify, list, and organize this cleanup to make it more efficient, and assign labor to locations where there is the greatest problem and need. The grant from the state to help us do this work requires us to provide public outreach and assistance to make people more aware of the importance of storm-water management.

Earth Day activity this year was an attempt to begin our program by creating better awareness of the role of storm structures in dealing with pollution. Dedicated High School volunteers gathered at 10 a.m. on Tuesday at the Aubrey Crocker House, 40 Parker Ave. (The Aubrey Crocker House is the former Hagerty Building now occupied by the Center for Student Coastal Research.) The group pictured, left to right, includes the following: Cohasset High School students J.T. Oronte and Kelly Hurley; Jessica Gould of Environmental Partners, the storm-water engineering contractor's representative; Cohasset High School students Mark Davis and Andrew O'Keefe; budding environmentalist Mitchell Buckley, and high school teacher Jack Buckley.

Oronte and Kelly Hurley; Jessica Gould of Environmental Partners, the storm-water engineering contractor's representative; Cohasset High School students Mark Davis and Andrew O'Keefe; budding environmentalist Mitchell Buckley, and high school teacher Jack Buckley check out a storm drain on Earth Day.

In the pouring rain, this stalwart group, together with Barry Butman of the DPW and Joe Godzik, Health Officer, using documents for collecting catch-basin information, went to selected catchbasins at Mariner's Park, and Sandy Beach to gather data for the town's storm-water management program. For their trouble, each student received a bagel and a beautiful Board of Health Earth Day T- shirt. These students, and others to follow, will form the core group of volunteers needed to assist the town in gathering needed catch-basin data.

When the collected data has been reviewed, and adjustments to the collection methods made, we will begin a regular town-wide program of storm structure management, in large part directed by inputs from citizen volunteers all over town. Look for more information about this important program from the Board of Health in the future.

Some progress on the jet pollution issue

LOGAN VIEW

MARY ANN FRYE

We want a smart transportation policy, with public health, air quality and the South Shore's value to the state economy given realistic weight.

What is happening on the jet pollution issue? What are South Shore residents working on now, and what do we want?

What we want:

- That the South Shore towns remain a healthful and valuable residential treasure.
- That the remarkable coastal environment – including our towns – be understood and treated as an asset crucial to the state's economy and image.
- That reliable facts emerge from environmental review of runway expansion and low altitude traffic on the South Shore, so the public can make an in formed choice.

From state government we want broad-based transportation planning to point the economy forward – away from an aviation-centered policy in economic decline. We want a smart transportation policy, with public health, air quality and the South Shore's value to the state economy given realistic weight. One example: supporting the Acela instead of high pollution jets for northeast corridor short hops.

Thanks to hard work by citizens, a noise study is scheduled to start in June, in which FAA, Massport and representatives from airport-impacted communities, including the South Shore towns, will work together.

There are three law suits in progress.

1) Judge Botsford is expected to rule on the Boston injunction case in Suffolk Superior Court in June.

2) The Hull nuisance and fraud suit is on appeal from a summary dismissal by Judge Hely in Plymouth Superior Court. Resolution could take two years.

3) An appeal of the FAA's record of decision for Runway 14/32, supported by individual donations, is proceeding in Federal Court.

Using Freedom of Information Act requests, citizen groups brought to light information that Massport withheld. The state's final environmental impact report grossly exaggerated delays at Logan and left out conclusions that undercut economic justification for a new runway. Through the efforts of Garrett Bradley and Bob Hedlund, we are asking state officials to revisit the environmental impact report.

We are fundraising. Real progress is coming from South Shore leadership, civic volunteers and your generous donations.

House budget doesn't back Romney reforms

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The organizing thought of the House budget emerged instantly: honesty is the best politics.

There may be a flaw in that logic, though: it presumes Mitt Romney is dishonest.

House Ways and Means Committee Chairman John Rogers said the House was trying to do the right thing, and the right thing was painful. "This budget talks about how bad things are, and if we start to sugarcoat the fiscal reality, then we do no service to ourselves, and more importantly, to the people we serve," Rogers told the state.

Budgets are political documents, not spending plans. Many, many adjustments are made to spending levels during the course of the year. The real numbers for available revenue and allowable spending aren't known until months after the fiscal year ends. If Rogers and Romney came out tomorrow and said they'd decided revenues were going to grow .8 percent instead of .2 percent next year, in that moment the projected deficit would go down $100 million. That's how ephemeral the math is.

What's real is the actual revenue collections, and the spending reported by agencies as the year goes along. Oh, and the politics. In this case, rather than building consensus, House leaders have built a crescendo of criticism against the administration. "We'll see if the numbers are real" – the initial reaction to Romney's budget in February – has changed to "the numbers aren't real." Actually, it's nastier than that. House Speaker Thomas Finneran summed up his chamber's current opinion of the governor's quest to balance the budget through reorganization: "What complete drivel." The governor has begun recruiting legislative candidates for the 2004 election.

Once Romney dug in his heels about taxes, as in "no new," and "discovered" an extra $1 billion in waste heretofore undetected, earlier suggestions of cooperation on behalf of the public were abandoned. Now the argument has really taken shape: the House is saying a lot of Romney's reorganizations of government don't make sense and shouldn't be adopted, and that he didn't really make the spending cuts necessary to get to a balanced budget. The governor has taken to saying he'll adjust the numbers if reform isn't going to save the amounts he claims, but that the Democrats don't want to go along with that because "House leadership wants to keep things the way they are, doesn't want to see change, wants the status quo."

One thing both teams have in common: they'd both raise the living daylights out of fees. From officially registering as a blind person to filing a complaint with the commission against discrimination, people doing business with the state are going to pay more no matter what happens. The final details will soon be worked out, such as: If I want to appeal a speeding ticket, will I have to pay $10 for the privilege, as the House proposes? Neither the governor's press office nor the House seemed in a rush to provide a specific list of fee increases; honesty has its limits.

The House is saying a lot of Romney's reorganizations of government don't make sense and shouldn't be adopted, and that he didn't really make the spending cuts necessary to get to a balanced budget.

- Senate president praises house effort — Robert Travaglini went straight to the h-word, echoing Rogers himself. The president said in a release: "The House budget represents two months of diligent work and is an honest reflection of the severity of our fiscal reality. I commend the Speaker and his House leadership for putting together realistic numbers in order to meet this budget shortfall." The Senate will have a different approach than the House, but early signs indicate the branches, perhaps out of necessity, won't be as far apart as they have in the past.
- MTA: this breaks the promise — Catherine Boudreau, president of the Mass. Teachers Association, said the $150 million in reduction in public education assistance – the first such reduction in 10 years – will violate the spirit of the 1993 Education Reform Law. At the same time, the Council for Fair School Finance, watchdog for the court order underpinning the law, warned the House cut appears to abrogate not just its spirit, but its letter.
- MMA: basic services will be cut — The Mass. Municipal Association reacted with dismay to the House budget, warning that hundreds or even thousands of teachers, firefighters, police officers and other local workers will stop providing services this spring. "You can't push communities off a cliff like this budget is doing," said MMA executive director Geoff Beckwith. Many are predicting a new surge of Proposition 2-1/2 overrides.
- CLF warns of lawsuit on energy fund — A coalition of environmentalists led by the Conservation Law Foundation warned of a lawsuit if the Legislature doesn't act quickly on a bill linked to the governor's diversion of a renewable energy fund. Romney and the Legislature emptied $17 million from the Renewable Energy Trust Fund to help cover this year's budget deficit; at the same time, the governor filed a bill increasing state government's use of renewable energy sources. Testifying for that bill, environmentalists said if it doesn't move soon, they'll go to court to force the state to live up to its commitment to cleaner energy alternatives.
- Lawmakers hit reorg — At a hearing on the governor's reorganization proposals, several senators said they could not vote for the package as a single proposal, and predicted it will be rejected by the Legislature as a whole if it comes in a single bill. The governor is due to file the plan May 1, and is trying to decide whether to break it into sections or submit one piece for an up-or-down vote. The House budget embraces some, but hardly all of Romney's government shakeup plans.
- On energy question, company says answer's blowing in the wind — One of the most visible players on Beacon Hill in recent days has been Cape Wind. The company, which wants to win permits for a wind farm off Nantucket, has posted ads and its proposal in the windows of the building on Park and Beacon streets, where everyone who works in the building is likely to see them at one point or another. Cape Wind held a press conference touting wind power as the hope of the future and support from electricians and some Cape fishermen. Another group of Cape fishermen put out a press release saying the project would harm the environmental quality of Nantucket Sound.

Politically correct words

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see there is a new word to be expunged from the PC dictionary and this may be the most difficult challenge since we were instructed to call women "wimyn" and the fatties among us "horizontally challenged persons."

The new word is "snow."

The culprit was the essay question on the fourth grade Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System (that's MCAS if you're a headline writer) exam, which is supposed to measure how much you've learned in school.

The students were asked to "write a story about a snow day off from school that you remember."

The students were asked to "write a story about a snow day off from school that you remember."

Right away the PC flags went up. Many of the students hadn't had a snow day off in years and some had never even seen snow, although after this past winter only a resident of Timbuktu didn't have a snow shovel in the back hallway.

Clearly, the test was biased against people of color who live in snowless lands, although Jesse Jackson has not yet lectured on it at Harvard Law School and Johnnie Cochrane has yet to file the first class action suit demanding millions in reparations.

It's getting so that the next book on the New York Times weekly roundup of best sellers will be a list of banned words — like the list the textbook division of McGraw Hill has of banned words and phrases, which sinks "man the boats" as sexist.

Or maybe it will be "The Language Police," by Diane Ravitch, who maintains, "We claim to promote diversity but everything that suggests people are different is being ironed out," like replacing "huts" with "small houses" to iron out ethnocentricity.

Me? I'll stick with "the Official Politically Correct Dictionary and Handbook," by Henry Beard and Christopher Cerf, that I bought several years ago when I won the coveted Male Chauvinist Pig Award for using "dumb" and "broad" in the same sentence.

I go back to the book every now and then, especially after I have had a glass too much of the house merlot and I summon the waitress to tell her there's a fly in my bisque when I know darn well I should have said, "Waitperson, there's a non-human animal in my soup."

The last time I was forcibly unemployed (sometime in the mid- '70s, if I recall right) the boss said to me, "You're fired. Turn in your key to the Coke machine." Today he would have told me I was entering the firm's "career alternative enhancement program."

Prostitutes are "sex care providers" or "persons presenting themselves as commodity allotments within a business doctrine," and pimps are "individuals holding management positions in the sexual work force."

Those of us who are only now coming to terms with "collateral damage" for civilian casualties in wartime, will be happy to learn that they did not die from the bombing but from the "accidental delivery of ordnance equipment."

And, says Beard and Cerf, "the term 'politically correct,' co-opted by the white power elite as a tool for attacking multiculturalism, is no longer 'politically correct.'"

Gee, and just when I was getting around to it, too.

Volunteer at the senior center

The Community Volunteer Program focuses on helping elders remain independent and remain in their homes. The volunteers of all ages help the Cohasset Elder Affairs with a variety of tasks from friendly visiting, telephone reassurance, van escort service and luncheon hostess. The program is designed to match the volunteer to the task and bring pleasure and companionship to both parties. Volunteer help is always, gratefully needed.

The volunteers have the ability to meet with, report to, and talk with the Outreach Coordinator, both on a regularly-scheduled basis and at times of the volunteer's choosing. Also the volunteer is accorded equal status and involvement in agency operations.

Call the Council on Elder Affairs at 781-383-9112 for more information.

1993 Education Reform Act. She said the kindergarten task force would examine the copious research on the subject of full-day kindergarten. Plans are to also include people who work in preschool programs in town on the task force as well as parents and faculty.

"The task force would review the research and visit full-day programs in the area and do a cost analysis," she said.

Sheehan explained a benefit of full-day kindergarten is having more time to meet the needs of the students and provide a more comprehensive program. She noted that most kindergartners have had some preschool experience, and therefore kindergarten is evolving into a place where children are ready for more.

"The short day is not a lot of time to do all we want to do," she said.

Fennessey said in an interview this week that kindergarten has evolved to provide children with more of an academic curriculum as opposed to the play-school environment of the past, and full-day kindergarten would be an extension of that.

Supt. Edward Malvey said he supports the concept, but says full-day kindergarten may not be needed in every community.

"Conceptually it is a good idea," he said. Malvey said the task force report would help the district decide if it's doing well enough with a half-day program and therefore did not need a full-day program. He noted that what works for one community does not necessarily work for another. "Until we see what the report says, I don't think we'll go full scale into it," he said.

Shedding light on the issue

Spofford to explain school illumination

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Rob Spofford of the School Building Committee will make a presentation at tonight's School Committee meeting explaining the outdoor lighting system at the renovated and expanded middle-high school.

Spofford will clarify issues raised at the last School Committee meeting at which neighbors presented a petition signed by 28 households stating the lighting plan was "excessive" and light pollution from the school had the potential to affect their quality of life.

In a telephone interview this week, Spofford explained the issues concerning the neighbors were raised at the School Building Committee meeting about 2-1/2 years ago. The SBC then incorporated changes in the design of the lighting plan to mitigate effects. For example, an elaborate circuit system was created to provide the ability to turn on only those lights that are needed at any give time.

"We went above and beyond," Spofford said. "We've provided maximum flexibility to the school."

Also incorporated in the plan are "shoebox-style" type lights that illuminate downward and prevent the light from traveling beyond the target area.

It appears that some members who signed the petition presented to the School Committee may have not been aware of the measures taken by the SBC, Spofford said.

He said the school has to meet state and federal codes regarding lighting needs including requirements under the Americans with Disabilities Act.

Lights installed on the building are also set up so they have minimal impact on abutters. The SBC is also working with certain neighbors who need more mitigation.

Spofford said, however, lighting at the renovated school would be more than what was there before. The 50-year-old school was not up to modern lighting standards.

"Right now the neighbors look out the window at night at darkness," he said. "With the new school, they will be looking at a place illuminated within its own space.

"We have to light it, it's a public space," he said. "But we've built in screening and maximum flexibility."

He said it would be highly unlikely to have the entire site lit at once.

The School Committee meeting gets underway at 7:30 p.m. at the middle-high school library.

LIBRARY CORNER

Book discussion for young adults

Attention all students between the ages of 13 and 16. The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is forming a book discussion, recommendation and advisory group for young adults. Mrs. Moody will facilitate and coordinate the meetings. The first planning session will be a pizza get-together Tuesday, May 13, from 7 to 8:30 p.m. in the Young Adult Room of the library. To register, call Moody at 781-383-1348. Space is limited.

Monoprints exhibit

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library will host an exhibit of monoprints by Don Larkin, "For the Young at Heart," May 2 through June 30. The opening reception will be held Sunday, May 4, from 2 to 5 p.m.

"For the Young at Heart" is meant to reach both children and adults. Since college at Massachusetts College of Art and graduate work at Cranbrook Academy of Art, Larkin has created playful images of birds and fish. Now after retiring from 32 years of teaching at Weymouth North High, he has returned to this playful subject matter.

Larkin was inspired to create this show by Cohasset's new library and his granddaughter. The library has a beautiful children's room across from the gallery. This wonderful space reaches out to greet children. Also, he was inspired by a print that he created for his granddaughter, Vie. These two things came together to create an opportunity to show art work that both children and adults would enjoy.

Larkin creates most of his prints at the monoprint studio at South Shore Arts Center, with Esther Maschio. He also works on smaller prints in his home studio.

Alzheimer's benefit brunch at Saporito's

"A Taste of Spring: A Wine Tasting Brunch," is the 11th annual fund-raising event for the Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore, Inc. The festivities will take place at Saporito's Florence Club Café in Hull on Sunday, May 18 at 1 p.m.

The event includes a five-course gourmet menu. Each course is accompanied by a wine selected by Mark Lewis of M.S. Walker Company who will explain the fine art of blending foods and wines. The Joe Micarelli Trio will provide a jazz accompaniment to the food and wine. Again, Andy and Mary Ann Saporito Boothroyd have selected from their culinary favorites to present an exciting menu. Lucky winners will be chosen for baskets of gourmet foods and wines gathered for the occasion.

All proceeds from this event underwrite ADSGSS activities: it's monthly newsletter, outreach brochures, postage, family information packets and the help-line phone. ADSGSS, Inc. is a non-profit educational corporation that depends solely on public donations.

Reservations for this event, that benefits this meaningful cause must be made in advance. Tables may be arranged to accommodate four, five or eight people together at $65 per person. Please call JoAnn Mitchell at 781-749-5417, evenings, for reservations.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week. This week, BHRC reports local senators roll call attendance records for the 2003 session through April 25.

The Senate has held 14 roll call votes. BHRC tabulates the number of roll calls on which each senator was present and voting and then calculates that number as a percentage of the total roll call votes held. That percentage is the number commonly referred to as the roll call attendance record. Thirty-two of the state's 40 senators have a 100 percent attendance record.

$22.497 BILLION BUDGET (H 4000) - The big news on Beacon Hill last week was the release of the House Ways and Means Committee version of a proposed $22.497 billion fiscal 2004 state budget. The package hikes many state fees but does not raise taxes. It also makes deep cuts in many areas including local aid, education and health care. Debate on the package is scheduled to begin April 30 and proposed amendments raising taxes will be considered first.

ENERGY EFFICIENT PRODUCTS (H 1270) - The Energy Committee has recommended that a bill prohibiting many products from being sold in Massachusetts after January 1, 2005 unless they meet certain minimum energy efficiency standards be shipped off to a study committee. The products include commercial refrigerators, freezers and clothes washers, ceiling fans, torchiere lamps, portable air conditioners, traffic signal devices and illuminated exit signs.

ELECT THE INSURANCE COMMISSIONER (S 839) - The Insurance Committee held a hearing on legislation providing that the state's Insurance Commissioner be elected rather than appointed. One of the commissioner's duties is to set auto insurance rates following a series of public hearings. Massachusetts is the only state in the nation that gives the commissioner this power while other states set their rates by law or by a competitive free market.

CHILD RAPE (H 321) - A bill heard by the Criminal Justice Committee would prohibit anyone convicted of child rape from having his sentence reduced or from being eligible for probation, parole, furlough or work release.

CHILDREN AND THE INTERNET (S 1914) - The Science and Technology Committee held a hearing on a proposal requiring all public schools and libraries to adopt a plan to ensure that minors using the facilities' computers be protected from dangerous, illegal or obscene material on the Internet.

OVER-THE-COUNTER MEDICATIONS (H 651) - A bill heard by the Taxation Committee would exempt over-the-counter medicines and nutritional supplements prescribed by a doctor from the state's five percent sales tax.

HEALTH INSURANCE DEDUCTION (S 1721) - The Taxation Committee held a public hearing on a measure allowing self-employed taxpayers to deduct their health insurance premiums on their state taxes.

VANITY PLATES (S 1367) - The Public Safety Committee held a hearing on a measure increasing from six to eight the number of letters and numbers allowed on vanity license plates.

POLICE AUTO ACCIDENTS (H 415) - The Public Safety Committee held a hearing on legislation providing that an impartial person conduct the investigation of any motor vehicle accident involving a police officer.

Burying wires to be included in village design

McMorris and Selectman Michael Sullivan were in favor of burying the wires, saying that most residents wanted it done but did not want to pay for it. But Selectmen Tom Callahan and Merle Brown were more skeptical. (Fred Koed did not attend Tuesday's meeting).

Callahan said burying the wires in the center of the village (South Main Street, Brook Street and Elm Street) would only draw funding away from planned improvements to Depot Court and Ripley Road. He said the Town would eventually end up asking taxpayers to pay to complete those portions of the project.

Brown said his main concern was that he thought safety was the primary goal of the project, not burying the wires.

According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, the Town has already spent, on the Waterfield Design Group alone, $100,000 of the $1.5 million state grant. Meanwhile, downtown merchants say they have raised $200,000 to contribute to the project if removing utility wires is incorporated into the plans. The merchants are also trying to raise an additional $100,000 to $200,000.

As of now, Waterfield has estimated the downtown revitalization project would cost $1,126,000, not including the $800,000 cost of burying the wires. Waterfield has determined that the town could save about $143,000 by having asphalt sidewalks instead of concrete with bluestone pavers, as are currently proposed.

"If we can bury the wires and revitalize the downtown village, I think that's what people want to do."

— Selectman Michael Sullivan

Sullivan said asphalt was worth the savings if it was the difference between burying or moving utility wires. "If we can bury the wires and revitalize the downtown village, I think that's what people want to do," he said. "Frankly, to me, whatever sidewalk treatment we use is not going to be noticed."

But the idea of asphalt sidewalks did not sit well with all selectmen. Brown said asphalt would "ruin the town" and would deteriorate in extreme hot and cold temperatures. Callahan said he thought people misunderstood what the concrete and bluestone pavers would look like.

Sullivan said if the Town did not have enough money to include burying the wires in the revitalization project, it could ask for additional funding through the Community Preservation Act. Callahan strongly disagreed, saying the project was not eligible for CPA funds.

Tom Hamilton of Dean and Hamilton Realtors, who sparked renewed interest in burying the wires with his comments at a Selectmen's meeting two weeks ago, said getting rid of the wires would be in the best interest of the town because it would increase the town's commercial tax base by raising the value of village property.

Selectmen agreed to appoint someone with local knowledge to help the Waterfield Design Group as it meets with the electric company and investigates the idea of feeding utility wires from behind Elm Street and South Main Street. The board is hoping that this alternative method of removing wires would create additional savings.

Wayne Sawchuk, who originally thought of the backdoor wire idea, requested Selectmen appropriate the $2887 necessary to design a sidewalk that extends on South Main Street to the old Paul Pratt Memorial Library. But the idea was turned down in the interest of saving money until Selectmen determine whether wiring alternatives can be incorporated in the project.

Waterfield president Craig Miller estimated it would take at least two weeks for the newly contracted work to be completed. Selectmen have scheduled to meet with Waterfield again at their May 19 meeting.

WORSHIP NOTES

Abbey series on 'finding meaning'

The Glastonbury Series for 2002-03, :Listening to Other Voices: Hope in a Time of Uncertainty" continues with Rabbi Karyn Kadar who will talk about "Finding Meaning and Purpose for Ourselves and Those We Serve." This event is Thursday, May 1 at 7:15 p.m. at Glastonbury Abbey.

Rabbi Kadar lived in Jerusalem for 10 years and was the first female to serve as a rabbi in Jerusalem. She is currently the director of the Great Lakes Region of American Hebrew Congregations, serving 62 congregations in five midwest states.

Among her topics of interest is Jewish spirituality. She is a contributor to "The Jewish Lights Spirituality Handbook" and "The Women's Torah Commentary." She is also the author of "Gifts from Our Grandmothers."

Please call the Abbey to reserve a place for this inspiring discussion at 781-749-2155. A free-will offering, the evening of the event is much appreciated.

Marriage enrichment

North River Community Church in Hingham is sponsoring a marriage enrichment program on Friday, May 16 from 6:30– 10 p.m. The evening begins with a delicious hot dinner served from 6:30 - 7:30 p.m., followed by The Five Love Languages video workshop. In a fun-filled presentation before a live audience, Gary Chapman, Ph.D., helps you identify your personal love language and helps you understand the love language of your spouse. Then he provides practical suggestions for enriching your marriage by practicing the other love language.

This program is open to the community. Couples in thriving or struggling marriages, couples whose spouse does not want to attend but you do, dating couples, and singles! Everyone can walk away with great communication tools to use in everyday life.

Registration ends May 11 so register today. Cost is $25 per couple/$12.50 singles and includes dinner and a workbook. To register, get directions to the church, or other information, please visit www.northriverchurch.org or call Debi Johnson at 781-294-8420.

Bats continue to lead the way for CHS baseball team

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The surprising Cohasset High baseball team stretched its winning streak to three games on Friday with an impressive 8-1 win over South Shore Voc Tech to improve to 4-2 on the season.

The visiting Skippers jumped immediately on Vikings starter Dave Salucci, pushing five runs across in the top of the first inning on four hits.

Shortstop Mike Dooley and third baseman Mike Snowdale sandwiched doubles around a long fly out to center by Chris McKenna to open the game to start the scoring. Cleanup hitter Ted Straughn then singled home Snowdale to make it 2-0.

After Matt O'Brien reached on an error, first baseman Trey Curry singled home Straughn. Pitcher Jon Downing then hit a hard grounder that got through the Vikings second baseman, and both O'Brien and Curry scored on the play.

The Skippers added one run apiece in the third, fourth and fifth innings to continue their torrid offensive start to the season.

"I'm really extremely happy with the way we've been hitting the ball so far," said Cohasset coach Al Galotta, following the game, "especially in the early going with the weather being far from ideal. We've been averaging eight or nine hits per game. Hopefully, we'll keep heating up as the weather does."

The Skippers pounded out

Small steps

Softball coach eyes slow, steady approach

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Deb Bostwick isn't asking for much.

The first thing the veteran coach who agreed to re-introduce Cohasset High to varsity softball this spring is requesting is patience. That's certainly understandable, and should be granted by those closest to the scene

One of the other big things she has asked for is the trust of her players. That, unfortunately, has not come quite so easily. Not that the longtime coach is all that surprised or even all that critical of this.

"I'm asking the girls to do some things differently than they've done in the past and that's not easy for some of them," said Bostwick. "But I would like it if they'd trust that I know what I'm talking about."

Bostwick, who has coached field hockey at Cohasset High and basketball at Carver High (where she also teaches) for several years, played softball in college and still plays in a serious league to this day. She certainly has the credentials to earn a little trust, but it has come slowly.

Subsequently, there have been frustrating days on the small diamond in recent weeks for the coach and her charges alike.

The Lady Skippers lost in games called early due to the slaughter rule to Carver in their last game before vacation on April 16 and their first game

A life cut too short

MIKE SPELLMAN

There are never more than a handful of athletes you honestly get to know in the performance of this job over the course of a school year. With all of the towns and all of the sports we cover here, that is simply a fact of life.

I knew Brendan MacDonald, who died this past weekend in a tragic accident, but not real well. I wish I could have known him better, though, as I truly enjoyed watching the way he played both hockey and lacrosse at Norwell High up until his graduation last spring. But he was one of those quiet kids, happy, it seemed, to let teammates grab the spotlight and do the talking.

I did know him well enough, though, to exchange greetings whenever I bumped into him, as was the case when I saw him at a Norwell High state tourney basketball game back in March. He told me he was really enjoying his freshman year at Norwich University and was doing well.

It wasn't much, but I remember thinking at that time with a smile that this was probably the most he'd ever said to me at any one time. Trying to get quotes from him several months earlier after his final high school lacrosse game had been akin to the proverbial pulling of teeth.

I also remember talking to him — along with his fellow seniors, Ben Spitz and Rob Himberg, last March— following their final high school hockey game. He used an impressive 10 cent word to describe what his high school hockey career

'Miracle' comeback win, humbling of Norwell add up to satisfying week

The Cohasset boys' varsity lacrosse team rolled into the heart of its schedule with a heart-stopping victory over Central Massachusetts power St. John's of Shrewsbury and a dominating performance against arch-rival Norwell.

The two wins left the Skippers at 4-1 on the season, the only loss coming to nationally-ranked Duxbury in the opening game.

Against Norwell on Tuesday night, before a vocal crowd at Alumni Field, Cohasset put on its most sustained offensive performance yet, winning 15-9. The visiting Clippers stayed with the home team for a half,

No stopping girls tennis team

Lady Skippers whitewash Harwich to remain perfect

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Just business as usual.

The Cohasset girls tennis team, holding only one practice since their last win on April 16, showed no signs of rust in slaughtering their Harwich counterparts, 5-0, on Tuesday. Not one member of the undefeated Lady Skippers has given up so much as a set to any opponent in their quest towards the playoffs.

Sophomore Liz Stone, so poised yet so deadly, continued to dominate the field with the double doughnut score 6-0, 6-0. Senior Lindsay Grossman followed at second singles with an identical score.

Meanwhile, third singles junior Holly Graham won what turned out to be the closest match of the day in Cohasset. It's a scary thing when the closest match ends in a 6-0, 6-2 score.

Both doubles squads shut out their opponents with overpowering play at the net, off the serve, from the baseline; every facet of the game was commanded by Cohasset. Senior captain Julie Shea teamed with junior Courtney Caron at first doubles, and junior Corey Evans won with newcomer freshman Susan Curry.

In five matches, the team gave up merely two games, while winning 60. Despite their extraordinary success in this and many previous seasons, the team maintains a solid work ethic without becoming complacent. In fact, even in matches such as this, where any number of line-ups would easily result in a W for CHS, the players are constantly working at honing their skills.

"It's still good practice for us," says Shea, in her final varsity season. "And it gives the freshman a chance to play, too."

Boys Tennis report

For the boys squad, times were tough for the second straight SSL match, as they fell to Harwich, 4-1. The Rough Ryders found redemption, after their two 3-2 losses to the Skippers in 2002 kept them out of the playoffs as the regular season came to a close.

The big winners of the day were the freshman duo, Chris Pescatore and Nils Sceery. Although the long bus ride and shortage of tennis courts kept them idle for a long time, the

CHS tracksters swept by Crusaders

Both of he Cohasset High track teams were topped by far bigger Carver teams on the road Tuesday. The boys fell, 88-47, the girls 80-49.

Junior captain Jenn Buckley provided three of the highlights for the LAdy Skippers squad, winning the javelin, as well as the mile and 2-mile races.

The losses dropped both teams to 2-3 on the season.

Both teams were scheduled to get back into action on the road against South Shore League rival Mashpee..

Cohasset underclassmen will take part in the annual Whitman-Hanson Freshman-Sophomore meet this Saturday (10 a.m. start), and other team members will compete later in the day at the Weston Twilight Invitational.

Both teams will take part in the South Shore League meet at Norwell High next Tuesday (3:30 p.m.), and the Coaches Invitational next Saturday at Plymouth South.

SPORTS NOTES

Soccer Club spring season begins Saturday

As a result of the bad weather the last few Saturdays the Cohasset Soccer Club will be beginning its spring season this Saturday, May 3rd. All players should be contacted by their coaches prior to the start of play to provide information on game times and practice schedules. All returning players will be on the same team as in the fall.

The schedule of play for the spring season will be Girls Under 10 playing from 8:30-10:00, Boys Under 10 from 9:30-11:00, Boys Under 6 from 10:30-12:00, Boys Under 7 from 11:15-12:45, Boys Under 8 from 12:00-1:30, Girls Under 6 from 12:45-2:15, Girls Under 7 from 1:30-3:00, and Girls Under 8 from 2:15-3:45. All sessions will begin with skills training then a game.

Additional information can be found on the Soccer Club's web site www.cohassetsoccer.com.

Coaching positions available

Applications are now being accepted for the following coaching positions for the 2003 winter season at Cohasset Middle/Senior High School: Head Girls Basketball Coach and Junior Varsity Girls Basketball Coach.

If you are interested in either of these coaching positions, send a cover letter, resume and three references to Athletic Director, Ron Ford, Cohasset Middle/Senior High School, 143 Pond St., Cohasset, 02025. For any questions or more information contact Ron Ford at 781-383-6103; or e-mail: rford@chs.ssec.org.

American Legion Baseball signup

The Post 118 American Legion Baseball team will hold tryouts on Sunday, May 11 at 9 a.m. at Scituate High School baseball field. Any player from Scituate or Cohasset interested in playing must attend these tryouts.

Post 118 Team Manager Scott Arnold is still looking for an assistant coach for the team. Anyone interested in the position or with questions regarding tryouts should call Scott at 781-545-1896

CHS Athletic Fundraising

This winter's ticket raffle by the CHS Athletic Boosters raised over $1,800, according to Ron Ford, with all proceeds going to the CHS Athletic budget. The AD wished to express his thanks to Bob and Allison Silvia for all of the work they did on the drive, as well as to Phil Mahoney and Robert Donahue for donating tickets.

This spring, the boosters are kicking off a sale of official CHS blankets ($50 apiece), flags ($45) and beach towels ($20), all with the official Cohasset High banner.

Anyone interested in making a purchase should contact Ron Ford at 781-383-6103 or send a check made out to "Cohasset High School" to Cohasset High School, C/O Ron Ford, AD; 143 Pond St; Cohasset' MA, 02025.

Youth tennis registration

Youth tennis will begin Monday, June 23, continue for seven weeks through Aug. 8. Youth tennis registrations will be held starting Monday, June 9, and continue throughout that week, as follows: Monday through Wednesday, 9 a.m. to noon and again 1 to 3 p.m., and Tuesday evening from 5 to 7 p.m.

The program is offered for children age 7 through 18. The program is designed on a Monday/Wednesday or Tuesday/Thursday schedule. The fee for the one seven-week session of instruction, two days per week, is $80 per participant. Lessons for beginners, intermediate, and advanced players are offered.

Rainy day policy: If it rains before 9 a.m., all tennis classes may have to be canceled for that day. Please call the Recreation Office at 781-383-4109 for weather status reports. Fridays are rain make-up days.

Boating safety course

The United States Coast Guard Auxiliary and the Cohasset Recreation Department will sponsor a two-session Safe Boating Course, offering certification by both the Coast Guard and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The course will be offered to both youth and adults; however, certification in this course is mandatory for 16-year-olds and under, who wish to operate any horsepower craft. This course is an initial requirement for the process of obtaining a Launch Operators License. U.S.C.G.A. instructors will teach the two-session course, which will be held two consecutive Saturdays, May 31, and June 7, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Ripley Road, Cohasset.

To register, call the Cohasset Recreation Department Office at 781-383-4109 as soon as possible as class will be limited in size and participants will be enrolled on first-call basis. There will be a $35 per person fee for this program, which covers the cost of text book and class materials.

While the class is designed for children/youth and adults, it is suggested that children age 12 and under be accompanied by a participating adult. A segment of the class will be devoted to the new laws regulating personal water craft.

State certification cards will be issued and most insurance companies will offer insurance rate discounts to those completing this course.

Two Cohasset indoor soccer teams celebrate championships

Two Cohasset indoor soccer teams won their respective championships last week at the Hingham South Shore Sports Center.

The U10 boys beat Hanover Friday and Select-Griffin on Saturday to advance to the finals on Monday against Braintree. Led by Derek Youngman in goal, the boys played their finest game and led 2-0 at the half. After the half, Braintree scored twice to even up the game at 2-2. With 1 minute to play Drew Cobin put in his third goal which gave Cohasset a 3-2 victory and the championship.

John McGoldrick added two assists and forwards Christian Quebec, Alex Perez, Kyle Algera and John Ryan confused Braintree with their terrific passing and hustle. Mike Monaco and Robbie Mahoney kept the Braintree forwards from mounting an effective offense with their skilled defensive moves. Jack Carrier, who was instrumental during the season on defense, was hobbled by an injury but was a helpful third coach to George McGoldrick and Jay Monaco on the bench.

On Tuesday the U12 Girls team beat Marshfield 5-3 to win their championship in the U12 Premiere Division. After beating Weymouth Sunday to advance to the finals, the girls put on an amazing display of teamwork by building a 3-0 advantage at half with goals by Maggie McGoldrick (2) and Tori Hart. In the second half Marshfield came out shooting but goals by Tori Hart and Rachel McMorris held off the Marshfield attack. Johanna Brophy was again outstanding in goal and the defense, led by Sammi Lehr, Caitlin Mahoney and Melissa Castro, played wonderfully. MacKenzie Hart, Kristin Monaco, Sarah Coggins and Allison Costa showed remarkable teamwork and passing skills that kept the pressure on Marshfield. Coaches Joe Coggins, Seth Hart and George McGoldrick are looking forward to taking this team outdoors for the spring season and hopefully back to the State Championships in June.

Lacrosse spirit night this Friday

The lacrosse boosters annual Spirit Night is scheduled for Friday night, May 2.

4 p.m.: The boys JV team will play at Milliken Field under the direction of their new Coach Matt Rossi. Rossi is an All-American defenseman from BC High who went on to play lacrosse for Fairfield and UNH. Those of us, who have had the pleasure of watching him coach, have quickly realized how fortunate we are to have a coach of his caliber and are immensely pleased with his coaching style and the relationship he has formed with his players.

5 p.m.: The boy's varsity team will start off their second home game of the season under the direction of their third year coach, Kevin Orcutt. Coach Orcutt, who also coaches soccer at Quincy High, was chosen by his Eastern Mass Division I coaching peers, as the 2003 Soccer Coach of the Year. He has also brought boys Cohasset High lacrosse team to State level of tournament play for the last two years running: the D2 title game in '01 and the quarter finals in '02. This year the boy's team is 3 in 1 with their only loss so far being to the Division I state champion, Duxbury.

The boys 11+U team (grades 3 and 4) will show us their expertise with a half time exhibition during the boy's varsity game. This is being coordinated by one of our new youth coaches, Brian Murphy and will involve players from three of the teams that we have this year at this level.

7 p.m.: the girl's varsity team will play against Marshfield under the direction of their second year coach Torin Sweeny and assistant coach Laurel Hickey.

The girls 12+U team will show us their expertise with a half time scrimmage during the girl's varsity game. These girls have improved greatly - with their biggest show to date with a huge win over Duxbury, already this year. Under the coaching of our veteran youth coach Chuck Jaffe and Jen Palmer, these girls have much to look forward to this season!

Pizza, soda and other items to appease the sweet tooth of those who attend will be available. Anyone wishing to volunteer at the food tables please give a call to Lyn Previte at 781-383-9723. Our lacrosse fundraiser coupon books will also be for sale. All lacrosse parking needs to be confined to the new lower parking lot as there is a school dance the same evening.

Curt Mills from Max Lax Lacrosse has graciously offered us the opportunity to raffle off a finalist for one week of his lacrosse camp offered this summer at Bridgewater State College! Raffle tickets will be made available at the food tables.

Unless you are a player or ball boy, please leave your lacrosse sticks at home. They will not be allowed to be used due to safety issues.

A life cut too short had meant to him. Both Spitz and Himberg (captains and regular spokesmen for the team that entire season) broke into immediate laughter.

"Wow," said one. "Big word," noted the other smiling captain, producing a blush and a shy smile from their chum.

Himberg, who attended Winchendon Prep School this year in order to improve his college hockey prospects, recently agreed to accept an offer from Norwich, a decision which had much to do with promise of reuniting with MacDonald.

The final reunion between these longtime pals, however, came on Monday, with Himberg serving as a pallbearer after the funeral.

Himberg was asked to speak at the funeral, and prepared a moving and heartfelt tribute to his friend, but was simply too overcome to read it when the time came.

"Rob really wanted to say what he'd written down, but he just couldn't get up there," reported Rob's dad, Bob Himberg. The Norwell Mariner has received a copy of Rob's tribute, and was honored to run it in full this week.

Apparently, Brendan was not nearly as shy with his peers as he was with reporters.

"You could be in the worst of moods, but Brendan wouldn't care," Himberg wrote and intended to say, "He would make it his task to get a smile out of you somehow or someway. For Brendan, though, it didn't take much, because his smile and laugh were infectious. If he was smiling and laughing, and you took one look at him, you couldn't help but walk away with a smile on your face."

In hockey, Brendan was a hard working, physical player who got the absolute most out of what skills he had. Moving from defense to forward in his senior year, he surprised many to finish fifth in the team scoring race with 10 goals and 15 assists, helping to lead the Clippers to an 11-7-2 season.

"Brendan was a good kid, fun to coach, and did whatever you asked," said Norwell High head hockey coach Paul Hurley. "It's just such a tragedy."

Lacrosse was his number one sport, though, and the one he was playing this spring at Norwich University. He was a very proficient and technically adept goalie. He was a the team's starter in net the previous three years, and played a key role in the program's first ever state tourney qualification in 2001 as well as its best ever 14-4 record last spring as a senior.

"As a coach, Brendan made life entertaining," recalled coach Frank Granara following Monday's funeral, taking a moment to celebrate the life of MacDonald. "He loved to carry the ball out of the net to get it into the offensive end. The coaches and his teammates would yell at him to get back in net, but he was a free spirit. And I don't think those charges out of net wound up costing us too many times either, and they wound helping us quite a bit."

Brendan was part of an extremely close knit group of Norwell High athletes who came up through the youth lacrosse ranks together and carried the NHS program to new heights. 11 members of this group were at Monday's funeral, many taking time away from studying for college finals to attend.

"His teammates loved him," said Granara following Monday's Funeral. "You could see in their eyes how much they were hurting. They all lost a great friend."

Both the NHS lacrosse and hockey programs have agreed to retire Brendan's uniform numbers, number one in lacrosse and number 11 in hockey. Plans are in the works for a formal retirement ceremony at the school in a few weeks.

A few hockey parents delivered both the home and away jerseys to the MacDonald house over the weekend, and the captains of last year's lacrosse team presented grieving parents Bob and Lou Ellen MacDonald with a number one game jersey following Monday's services.

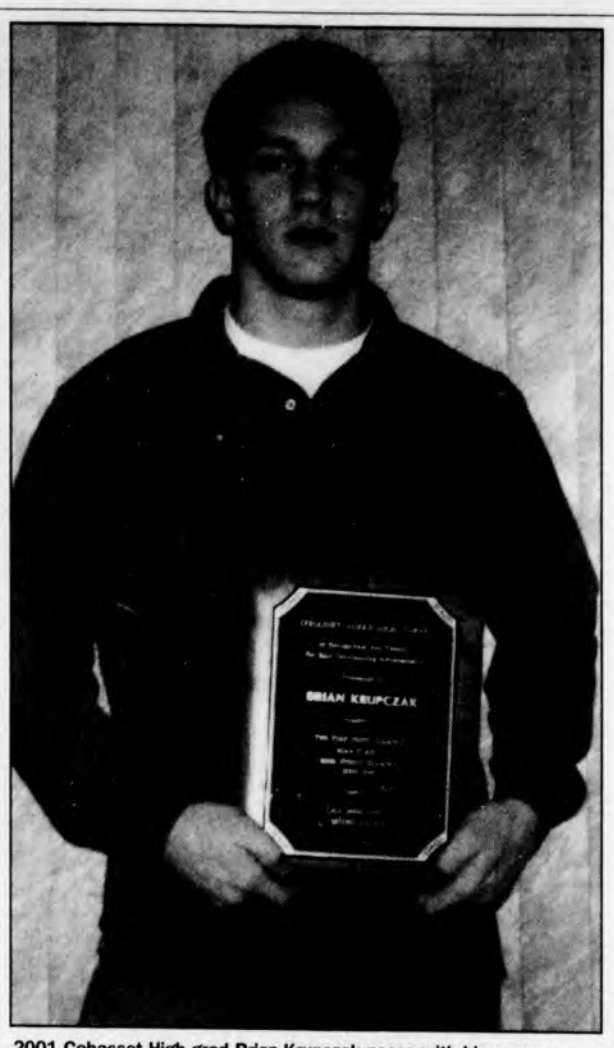
According to reports, Bob MacDonald stepped to the alter to deliver a beautiful tribute to the youngest of his three sons.

"I don't know how he did it," said Himberg. "It was amazing that he found the strength."

An understatement if ever there was one. Speaking as a father of four, I'm amazed he even manufactured the resolve to get up off the floor.

As for Rob Himberg, he wrapped up his unspoken remarks by quoting G. Randolph. "Truly great friends are hard to find, difficult to leave and impossible to forget,' the 19-year old borrowed.

The final words, though, were his own: "Brendan will never be forgotten and a piece of him will live on in all of us forever."



2001 Cohasset High grad Brian Krupczak poses with his career achievement plaque, awarded for his two individual state championships won in track and field.

New additions to CHS trophy case

The Athletic Department announces the recent additions to the new athletic trophy case in the lower lobby located in the back enhance to the school. The ice hockey team received a plaque for winning their second consecutive South Shore League title. The wrestling team also won their second consecutive league title plaque, by finishing as co-champions of the South Shore League.

On Dec. 28, 2002, Brian Krupczak was presented with a career achievement plaque, awarded for his two individual state championships won in track and field. Brian won the State Class D State Title in the 200 meter run in 2000 and 2001. Brian and his parents were presented the award by his brother Jared prior to a boys basketball game. Jared is a senior captain of the basketball and track and field teams here at CHS. Brian is currently a sophomore at Washington and Lee and a member of the football and track and field teams.

back this past Tuesday to Harwich.

The Lady Skippers record now stands at 1-5 on the year (0-4 in SSL play), but will see their best chance at league wins over the next week with Norwell coming to town today (3:30 p.m. start) and Mashpee on Monday (4 p.m.).

"We're still hoping for an upswing, and eyeing small steps," concluded Bostwick. "Things are a little frustrating right now, but we're young, we're learning. I can definitely say I see a light at the end of the tunnel."

trailing only 7-4, but a seven-goal third quarter by the Skippers turned the fourth into bench-clearing time. The third period outburst was marked by yet another intensive flurry of goals that's becoming a hallmark of the 2003 season. Cohasset, in the last four minutes of the quarter, scored five unanswered goals – two each by senior John Durkin and soph Jake Previte, and the fifth by senior co-captain Robert Hickey – to end whatever suspense was left in the game. Cohasset stretched its lead to 15-7 early in the fourth, and then cleared its bench.

"That was impressive and gratifying," said head coach Kevin Orcutt, "because we twice gave up goals right at the end of the first and second quarters, and killed our momentum both times. We got really good play from both our midfield and our attack. Norwell's game plan was to shut off Curt (Kahn), but he still got two goals and four assists. And everybody else stepped up, especially Matt Davis, Jake, JD (Durkin) and Raz (Mike Rasmussen)."

Junior Nick Murphy had 14 saves to anchor the defense, while senior co-captain Nick Spirito – excelling at longstick midfield – teamed with Hickey and Durkin to dominate the faceoffs.

Durkin and Previte each had hat tricks and one assist, while Matt Davis had a pair of goals and three assists. Hickey had two goals, as did Rasmussen, while senior co-captain Tom Anderson had the other score.

Cohasset 9, St. John's 8

On Friday, in a game reminiscent of the play-off "miracle" win versus Ipswich two years ago, Cohasset rallied from four goals down with eight minutes to play, and defeated non-league opponent St. John's of Shrewsbury 9-8 in the 2003 home opener at Alumni Field.

The Skippers, outplayed and outhustled by the Central Massachusetts powerhouse for most of the game, scored five goals in five minutes, then won the final faceoff of the game and killed the clock without ever losing possession.

Soph attackman Jake Previte scored the game-winner off a feed from senior Matt Davis—who had three goals and an assist to lead Cohasset scorers, despite missing a week's worth of practices due to a school trip. Davis broke the 100-point mark for his career with his first goal, and now has 103 points. Senior attackman Curt Kahn also had three tallies, all coming in a two-and-a-half minute burst with just over six minutes left in the game.

Junior goalie Nick Murphy had his best performance of the season, making 13 saves and clearing effectively to an all-junior close defense of Steve Davis, Conor Buick and Mike Devine. Senior co-captain Nick Spirito, moving to longstick midfield, led the team in ground balls.

"St. John's was one of the most athletic teams we've ever played," said coach Orcutt, "but we've shown that we're explosive and now we know we have heart. This could have been a defining game for us."

The Skippers were scheduled to host Pilgrim rival Falmouth at Alumni Field last night, and will face another Pilgrim opponent – Marshfield – on Friday night at Alumni as part of the Cohasset Lacrosse Boosters "Spirit Night". On Monday, Cohasset hosts Nantucket in a non-league showdown scheduled for Alumni at 4. Then, on Tuesday, the Skippers face off against two-time defending Div. 2 state champ Hingham at Alumni.

pair showed no signs of rust in jumping out and staying on top for a 6-0, 6-1 win.

At first doubles, senior Scott Faber and Andrew Wise played a wild and competitive match, but eventually fell in three sets. After falling behind 5-1 to start the match, the Skippers climbed back to even the set before losing a tiebreaker. In the second set, Faber and Wise took over the frontcourt, authoritatively taking the middle set 6-2. With momentum in Cohasset's favor, Harwich turned the tables to win the final set, 6-1.

Ross Lieb-Lappen lost for the first time this year at third singles, with senior Ash Alcorn winning 7-5, 6-0. Junior Tim Anton lost to senior Justin Turco at second singles, 7-5, 6-4, and Ingber fell to junior Craig Druschella 6-3, 6-1.

Understandably disappointed at traveling 90 minutes both ways only to lose, the team is considering some line-up changes. The team has basically maintained a steady roster for the opening five matches of the year. However, with two straight losses in league, freshman Nils Sceery may be looked to as even more of a key to the team, possibly jumping right into second singles. The shift would allow Tim Anton to utilize his net strength better at first doubles.

The guinea pig line-up will likely be attempted for the first time against Norwell this Thursday, when both the boys and girls teams take two of the top teams in the league. For the boys, Norwell is the clear-cut favorite, while the girls hope to unseat the Lady Clippers as the indisputable cream of the South Shore crop.

Hearing Loss Proven Devastating To Quality of Life
Minneapolis, MN—Not until the National Council on Aging Study was there any solid clinical data to correlate hearing loss to the occurrence of depression, dementia, anger management, continued social interaction, etc. This research now shows definitively that hearing loss affects nearly every aspect of how a person exists in his or her environment. When it is not treated, hearing loss profoundly impacts both physical and mental health. This new data has recently been published in the Journal of American Medical Association. New digital hearing technology is now making aids more comfortable and effective provided the technology is fit properly by qualified professionals. Northeast Audibel which has been fitting hearing instruments in Massachusetts for over 36 years has recently been appointed an Authorized Center for Hearing Excellence by Audibel corporate headquarters in Minneapolis. If you would like to schedule a free, no-obligation hearing evaluation with Northeast Audibel, you can reach them at 1-866-536-HEAR (4327).

eight hits in all, with Straughn (3-for-4, double, 2 RBI) leading the way.

The eight runs was more than enough for starter John Downing. The junior held the Vikings scoreless through the first six innings, but lost his shutout bid when Corey Nicotra singled to open the final inning and eventually came around to score with the help of a passed ball and an infield error.

The righthander mixed in his curve effectively with pinpoint location to keep the Vikings hitters off balance all morning. He hit a couple of batters early, but then settled down to surrender just three hits and two walks in his strong seven innings of work.

"John was throwing strikes and that was the big thing," said Galotta. "Especially when you've got a lead, that's the way you want to do it."

Strong pitching was the theme for the week, as Ted Straughn carried a no-hitter into the sixth inning on Wednesday in a 10-2 Skippers win at home.

The sophomore fireballer, who struck out seven in his six innings of work, lost his bid for baseball immortality when a Millis players legged out an infield single in the sixth, but he closed out that frame to keep the visitors off the board.

Senior Mike Snowdale, a regular in the rotation last year who is trying bounce back from some early arm troubles, pitched the final inning.

Cohasset shortstop Mike Dooley lunges to snare this infield pop at the last instant.

Seniors Matt O'Brien and Trey Curry each had a pair of hits and an RBI apiece. Straughn also added a couple of hits to help his own cause.

Baseball Notes

Unfortunately, the win streak ended on Tuesday. After the 90-minute bus ride to the far end of the Cape, the Skippers proved no match on this day for host Harwich.

The Cohasset bats produced only four hits on the afternoon, with Matt O'Brien singling home his team's only run in the sixth inning.

Dragons swamp Lady Skippers

The CHS girls lacrosse team was simply no match for the perennially powerful Lady Dragons of Duxbury in their first game back from vacation, Tuesday, as they fell 15-3 to drop their record on the season to 3-2.

Nicole Turgiss and Lisa Spirito scored first half goals for the Lady Skippers, but all that did was send the Cohasset girls into the visiting locker room at half down 10-2.

Team captain Maura McKenney scored a pretty goal in the slot in the waning moments to close out the scorign for the game.

The Cohasset girls begin a four game homestand tonight (5:30 p.m. start) against Sandwich. The girls will play under the lights at Alumni Field on Friday night (7 p.m.) as part of the Cohasset Lacrosse Boosters "Spirit Night" against Bourne. Holliston comes to town next Tuesday afternoon (4 p.m.) and Scituate rolls in for another night game (7 p.m.) next Friday.

CHS sports scheduling updates

With all of the postponements of CHS sporting events forced by inclement weather the last two weeks, Athletic Director Ron Ford is urging parents and fans to check his daily voicemail postings (@781-383-6103) for schedule changes before heading out to an event.

Kick-aerobics registration

The Cohasset Recreation Department announces an ongoing registration for adult fitness classes, based upon six-week sessions. Master martial arts and certified aerobic trainer Charles Palmer will conduct the class. This 70-minute class will provide participants with a total body workout through high-energy instruction in step aerobics, kick-boxing, and muscle conditioning. The class will meet Tuesday and Thursday mornings in the Town Hall auditorium from 9 to 10:15 a.m. The cost for the 12-class session is $100 per participant. Step equipment will be provided for up to 20 participants; however, 2 to 5 lb. hand weights should be brought to class for the muscle conditioning segment of the training. Call the Recreation Department at 781-383-4109 to register.

Over-55 softball league opens play

It's "Batter Up" for the opening of the fourth season of the South Shore Senior Softball League on Sunday, April 27 at 10 a.m. at Central Park Field in Scituate.

Jim Hyde, founder and manager of the Senior Softball League is optimistic that the sun will shine, the field will be dry and many regular participants will show up ready to play. This very popular league, sponsored by the Scituate Council on Aging, is open to all those 55 and over.

Jim plans to field four teams and use two Scituate field each Sunday (including Central and the baseball diamond at the rear of the Gates Intermediate School) and one field on Wednesday to ensure all players take the field. Jim asks that all interested players meet at the Central Park playing field (on Branch Street, in front of Central Park Housing) on the 27th. There will be an obligatory registration including rules review, release signing and payment of a $30 fee. Teams will then be divided and play will start at the Gates as well as at the new Central Park Field. Come prepared and ready to play!

For further information, please call the Scituate Council on Aging at 781-545-8722 or Jim Hyde at 781-545-4681.

CNC acquires two Boston area newspapers

By Greg Turner
CNC STAFF WRITER

In a move to expand its suburban footprint, Herald Media Inc. yesterday announced the purchase of a pair of weekly newspapers that cover two towns northwest of Boston.

The Harvard Post and The Bolton Common become part of Herald Media's Community Newspaper Co. (CNC), owner of the Cohasset Mariner and more than 100 other publications.

``This is an important opportunity for growth,'' said Patrick J. Purcell, publisher of Herald Media, the privately held parent company of Needham-based CNC and the daily Boston Herald.

``We look forward to building on the strength of these firmly established newspapers and expanding our coverage of local news in the suburbs of eastern Massachusetts,'' he said.

Herald Media bought the papers Tuesday from independent owner Kathleen Cushman. The sale price was not disclosed.

Cushman co-founded the Post in 1973 and the Common 15 years later with Edward Miller, her husband at the time. Cushman's Harvard Post Newspapers Inc. had been the sole owner of both papers since 2000.

The weeklies are published Fridays and have a combined circulation of 5,200.

Until the acquisition, Bolton and Harvard were just outside CNC's northwest territory along the Rte. 495 corridor. The company publishes papers in nearby Littleton, Boxborough, Stow and Hudson.

``We realize the newspapers have a long history of commitment to Harvard and Bolton,'' said Greg Rush, CNC's associate publisher and chief operating officer. ``In an effort to continue that commitment and to enhance the bond between the communities and the newspapers, we'll seek input from readers and advertisers within these communities.''

The papers' small staff and editorial offices in Harvard will be maintained for now, according to Kevin R. Convey, editor-in-chief of CNC.

``Our desire would be to place qualified people wherever possible, whether they be open positions in CNC or on those papers,'' he said. ``But we can't make any guarantees right now because we just don't know enough (about how the papers operate).''

The Post and Common Web sites will be incorporated into TownOnline.com, CNC's Internet site.

Purcell bought CNC from Fidelity Capital in February 2001 taking over a group of newspapers covering nearly every community from Boston to Worcester, north to New Hampshire and south to Cape Cod.

He called the Harvard-Bolton deal a strategic acquisition aimed at maintaining CNC's competitive advantage and protecting its position in the market.

CNC publishes four daily newspapers, 89 weeklies, 14 shoppers and several specialty publications. Herald Media's print publications reach more than 1.7 million readers in eastern Massachusetts.

Yard sale to benefit scholarship fund

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee will hold its annual yard sale to benefit the Joseph F. Walsh III Memorial Scholarship Fund on Saturday, May 3 from 8 a.m. to noon at 85 Linden Drive (off of Jerusalem Road). The theme this year is "Something for Everyone" and shoppers will find a treasure trove of household items, china, glassware, collectables, linens, books, toys, sports equipment and much more.

Committee Chair, Agnes McCann, predicts a large turnout, "This is our only annual fundraising event and we are so fortunate to have such a large amount of community support. With the diversity of items we have for sale, we hope to exceed last year's great success. We have lots of fun and, because every dollar goes to such a worthy cause, it's guilt free shopping! We invite everyone to join us."

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee has awarded the Joseph F. Walsh III Memorial Scholarship to graduating Cohasset seniors since 1978.

Anyone with items to donate should call 781-383-0222 for delivery or pick-up information.

Sturino to attend Student Leadership Conference in DC

Carling Sturino, Class of 2004, has been selected to participate in the National Student Leadership Conference (NSLC) on "Mastering Leadership," a leadership development program for outstanding high school students. While attending the NSLC, Sturino will have the opportunity to study, experience, and develop the skills and traits that define and identify a leader. This summer, approximately 3,500 gifted high school students from across the U.S. and from 45 countries around the world will find themselves immersed in a learning environment unlike any they have experienced. These young leaders return to their schools with increased potential and newly-developed abilities that enable them to make a positive difference in their communities.

During the conference, students attend special workshops and classes where they study the "distinction of leadership." Special guest speakers add a sense of reality and bring current, national and international issues to life. In previous years these have included U.S. Secretary of Education Rod Paige; former U.S. Secretary of State, Madeleine Albright; former Attorney General, Janet Reno; President of World Bank, James Wolfensohn; and Supreme Court Justices, Anthony Kennedy, Sandra Day O'Connor and David Souter; as well as world-renowned surgeons, international medical researchers, ambassadors, Pentagon and White House officials.

Through participation in this extraordinary six-day program, students develop their abilities to think on their feet, to engage in critical analysis, and to communicate effectively — skills that will serve them well as leaders in high school, college and throughout their lives. The NSLC mission is to identify and recognize outstanding young leaders from around the world and to provide them with a unique learning environment that encourages not only academic achievement but also diversity, cooperation and social responsibility.

"Students develop a sense of independence and responsibility," said Dr. Paul M. Lisnek, the NSLC director of academics and former assistant dean of Loyola University Chicago School of Law. "They leave with a true feeling of accomplishment and confidence in their ability to handle the challenges that lie ahead."

The NSLC offers leadership conferences on Mastering Leadership, Law and Advocacy; The Trial, Law and Advocacy; The Appeal; Medicine & Health Care; Business and Commerce; International Diplomacy; and Congressional Process, Policy and Politics.

Support CHS baseball

The Cohasset High School Baseball team will be involved with fundraisers for the next two weekends. They will sell bumper stickers at the Little League Opening Day Ceremonies on Saturday, May 3, for $3 each or two for $5. The following day, Sunday, the team will be available to help unload cars at the Recycling Transfer Facility and accepting donations at the gate. On Saturday, May 10, (weather permitting), the baseball players will be at George Roukounakis' Olympic Citco ready to wash cars! The Diamond Club is hoping to raise enough money to buy equipment needed to rebuild the baseball program at Cohasset High School. Please call 383-9857 or 383-9131 with any questions.

Unicorn singers present English choral music

On Saturday evening, May 3, the sanctuary of Hingham's Lutheran House of Prayer will resound with some of the most glorious choral music to come out of Britain in the 20th century, performed by the South Shore's own venerable chamber chorus, the Unicorn Singers. The program will be repeated at Weymouth's Old South Union Church on Sunday afternoon.

Director Margo Euler has programmed music of two of Britain's greatest composers of choral music, Benjamin Britten and Edward Elgar. Britten's well-known and beloved a cappella work "Hymn to St. Cecilia" and his cantata "Rejoice in the Lamb" are on the program, as well as the rarely-heard "The Music Makers" by the Edwardian master, Edward Elgar. Listeners will have the opportunity to contrast the musical style of Elgar, whose roots are in the Victorian era, with the more contemporary voice of Britten, who died in 1976.

Euler became familiar with the rarely-heard Elgar piece at a choral festival she attended, led by the great English conductor Sir David Willcocks. The piece, written for chorus and large orchestra, was sung there with Sir David at the piano; performing it was so exciting that Euler decided to program it with her group of 24, even though the Unicorn Singers rarely visit the major works that require full orchestra. Sir David "worked with me on a 4-hand piano conception of the work," said Euler, "and he convinced me our audience probably wouldn't miss the orchestra, most likely never having heard the piece before! It is truly a choral tour de force, set to a poem of Arthur O'Shaughnessy, full of heroic optimism blended with nostalgia and melancholy—and such seductive melodies!"

Saturday night's concert at Hingham's Lutheran House of Prayer (916 Main St.) is at 8 p.m. and Sunday afternoon's at Old South Union Church in Weymouth (25 Columbian St.) is at 4 p.m. Tickets are $10 adult/$8 senior, available at the door. Call 781-749-6561 for information.

IT'S HAPPENING

Local Authors Night

The Hingham Public Library and Buttonwood Books are hosting a Local Authors Night at the Hingham Public Library on Wed. May 7 from 7-9 p.m. Stuart Van Tine and Dan Harris are from Hingham and Bob Maki, formerly of Cohasset, are the featured writers. The format for the evening will be a brief presentation and reading by each author followed by question/answer period and a book signing.

Van Tine is the author of "A Fine and Private War"; His book is a high-seas action thriller with an international flair. The ongoing action will appeal to fans of Tom Clancy. Harris has published his second novel, "Capital Crimes". Set in the fictional town of Centerreach on Cape Cod, Harris's mystery draws on his knowledge of local setting and his background in business. Maki, a former resident of Cohasset, features his former hometown as the setting in his latest book, "The Sea's Lament". Landmarks in Hingham and Cohasset are featured in this novel about faith and courage.

This is a free event, and the public is most welcome. Please call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

Novelist at Buttonwood

Laura Shaine Cunningham, author of "Beautiful Bodies", "A Place in the Country" and "Sleeping Arrangements" will be at Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset on Thursday, May 8 from 7 - 9 p.m. Cunningham will discuss her latest book, "Dreams of Rescue" (Atria Books, $24.00), a literary chiller set in contemporary time. A question/answer period as well as a book signing will follow the discussion. Cunningham, award winning novelist, playwright and journalist, has written for many publications, including "The New Yorker" and "The Atlantic Monthly". This is a free event, and the public is most welcome. Please call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

Historic Hingham homes are on tour

The 79th Annual Tour of Historic Hingham Homes, sponsored by the Hingham Historical Society is slated for Sunday, May 18 from noon to 6 p.m.

Five private homes will be open for viewing. The 1788 Jonathon Cushing home has an elegant interior combining both federal and Italian themes. The 1846 cottage of Issacher Fuller has grown into a charming home with spacious living areas on two levels. An 1895 shingle-style home boasts an impressive staircase, a greenhouse, and a lovely double parlor. A remodeled summer house features spectacular views of the Boston skyline and Hingham Bay, while a gambrel cottage has been much expanded to house a fascinating collection of family paintings, Chines artifacts and decorative accents.

These homes are not handicap-accessible.

"Ornate, Ordinary and Oh-So-Necessary Ceramics in Daily Life," exhibits from the society's collection, will be shown throughout the Old Ordinary on tour day, May 18; and again from June 17 through Sept. 6, Tuesdays to Saturdays, 1:30-4 p.m.

Tickets are $15 in advance and $20 on the day of the tour. They are available by mail and also at Bowl and Board in Hingham Square, the Hingham Public Library at 66 Leavitt St. and Noble's Camera Shops in Hingham Square and Lincoln Plaza. Tickets on tour day will be sold only at the Old Ordinary, 21 Lincoln St. after 9 a.m. At that time, tickets may also be exchanged for tour books.

To order tickets by mail, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope and your check to: The Hingham Historical Society, P.O. Box 434, Hingham 02043 and mark the envelope: "House Tour".

For more information, please call 781-749-1851 or 781-749-1574; or visit the society's Web site at http://www.hinghamhistorical.org.

La Leche league meets on May 13

The La Leche League will hold a meeting on Tuesday, May 13, at 7:30 p.m. at the Paul Pratt Memorial library, Cohasset. The discussion subject is "The Advantages of Breastfeeding and Getting Off to a Good Start."

LLL is a non-profit worldwide organization offering information, education and support for breast feeding and parenting. Meetings are free. Pregnant and nursing mothers are encouraged to attend, and babies are always welcome. For more information and directions call 781-924-1919, or 781-829-9075.

Estate auction promises to be an antique hunters dream

By Matthew J. Gill
MGILL@CNC.COM

This mannequin wears an antique, Victorian-age wedding gown, one of the thousands of items on the block at next week's big auction at the Bayfield Shop in North Scituate.

One of the many buildings holding the antique treasures of the Bayfield Shop.

Are you in need of an antique tea set?

Does an original whale-oil lamp strike your fancy?

How about an original oaken icebox or a flax wheel?

If so, you might consider reserving time on your calendar to "purchase a little bit of Scituate history."

On May 9 and 10, Caddigan Auctioneers of Hanover will auction off thousands of antique items from the collection of Dorothy Meurch and her famous Bayfield Shop in North Scituate. The shop is literally a museum, and sprawls over several rooms and buildings on the Country Way estate. Caddigan, who has been appraising the antiques for nearly a year, says the two-day auction will showcase "the largest array of antiques ever offered on the South Shore."

But before the auction, the mother/son auctioneer team of Joan and Jeremy Caddigan will have their work cut out for them, preparing and pricing the goods. Joan Caddigan explained why this auction will be anything but typical.

"She's got ten of everything," she said.

For more than 40 years, Meurch bought, sold, and collected and her shop is known for both its extensive variety, and also for its famous clientele. After performing at the South Shore Music Circus, performers like Liberace, Johnny Cash, Joan Rivers, and Andy Williams came in to choose from Meurch's unique collection — and often paid return trips to visit the proprietor, Meurch.

"She was kind of a character," said Caddigan. "More than kind of a character."

Meurch's daughter Priscilla Schultz described her mother as "stubborn, active, and independent" recalling how it was that her mother's collection of antiques had grown so large.

"She used to buy out houses, with all their antiques in them," she said. As her collection grew and grew, local antique hunters would commonly repeat a favorite saying, "let's go to Dottie's shop. If she doesn't have it, you don't need it."

Meurch's father Jesse Parmelee Litchfield opened the "Bayfield" woodworking shop with his partner Henry Turner Bailey in 1904. The shop's name originated from a combination of the men's surnames.

The two craftsmen built furniture, did restoration work, and carved street signs that once appeared all over Scituate.

In one of the shop's upper rooms, there is a hand-carved fireplace mantle that Litchfield fashioned for the Hotel Somerset in Boston nearly a century ago. Somehow, it has found its way back to his daughter's shop.

Meurch got into the business of collecting when her father passed away in 1961.

In order to make a living and pay off the property taxes for the estate's many buildings, she began her antique trade. Shultz said her mother was "a witty lady with a terrific sense of humor" and two signs on the shop's wall reveal a bit about the woman and how she ran her business.

"Dishes don't bounce," is posted with authority on the curved glass of one china cabinet, and above the door: "All of our guests bring happiness; some by coming, others by going –which one are you?"

In more recent years, Meurch would often hand her customers the keys to the shop and told them if they wanted to purchase something to come back.

After running the store for more than 40 years, Meurch died in February at the age of 94.

Caddigan said the auction will feature a "mind boggling" amount of antiques. Among the items are hundreds of lamps, dolls, and dishes of all description. There are paintings and model ships, and even a sundial.

In Meurch's showcase room, the list goes on. Not only are the eight china chests and French-styled cabinets for sale, but so are their contents — and they are well-stocked with porcelain and silverware. "Every drawer is full," said Caddigan.

Downstairs in the workroom, there are hundreds of specialty tools that Litchfield and Bailey used to fashion their many creations. Their wrenches, vices, and planes, as well as horseshoes, glass bottles, and a vintage champagne bottle will be up for auction next weekend.

"We're going to try to sell everything, but as you can see, there is about 100,000 items here," said Caddigan.

The auction will also feature a variety of antique wood parts and pieces that could prove valuable to a wood worker, said Caddigan.

"These pieces would be very dear to a restorer because you just cant find these pieces anywhere," she said. The entire wood collection will be auctioned as a lot, and features pieces in mahogany, maple, walnut and oak. "You name it, he's got it," said Caddigan.

Caddigan said the auction will be held on site because it would be too much work to move the pieces anywhere else. She described the buildings outside as shaping an environment similar to "what Cape Cod used to look like." Shingled, small, and weather beaten, the little buildings which Meurch's father used to rent out as apartments, currently house scores of antiques. Once their contents have been sold, the buildings will be up for sale as well.

The event will provide an opportunity for locals to peruse some of Meurch's collection which have never before been seen by the public. Caddigan said some of the rooms have been locked up for 40 years, and with all of the goods and notoriety, she's expecting a huge turnout.

The proceeds of the auction will go to the family estate.

The auction will be held under a tent outside the 675 Country Way shop beginning at 11 a.m. both days and running until "we're exhausted," Caddigan said. Visitors are encouraged to bring a chair for seating will be limited. For more information call the Caddigan Auctioneers at (781)826-8648.

Sharing novel thoughts on the writing business

Hingham's Harris talks about books

By Jerry Elsden
CORRESPONDENT

Hingham author Dan Harris aptly describes himself as unconventional when it comes to book writing and publishing. He doesn't follow many of the hard and fast rules, yet two of his novels have been published and he's working on his fifth, plus a Hollywood screenplay. Not bad for a first-time author who never had a literary agent.

Harris recently gave his views on writing and getting published to members of the South Shore Writers Club at the Rockland Public Library in the first annual Richard "G" Lee Memorial Lecture. Lee, who died last year, was a founding member of the club and volunteered in many Hingham organizations.

"Goodbye Dearie," a fictional memoir about growing up in the 1950s and 1960s, is Harris's first book. He was inspired to write it after discovering old family letters his mother had saved in the attic of their West Hyannisport, Cape Cod summer home. She died in 1997. An English major in college, Harris already had written the first chapter of "Goodbye Dearie" before he retired in 1998 from Procter and Gamble as a marketing executive. Retirement allowed him to finish the book.

"Goodbye Dearie' started out as a love story and a series of vignettes, but how could I weave those together? A minor character, to my great surprise, burst out and became that major character that turned this book into a full-length novel, " recalled Harris.

"So I thought 'what if the Planning Board member who casts the critical vote ends up murdered on the construction site?' I started taking lots of notes at the meetings, so eventually a board member asked me if I was going to run for office."
— Dan Harris

Getting the book published was daunting, but Harris learned to deal with rejection. "Publishers want you to send your manuscript with a self-addressed stamped envelope enclosed, so they can return it to you. I sent manuscripts to about 30 publishers and got them all back in those envelopes with my handwriting on it!" He showed the book to two agents. "Both of them retired right after reading it," he laughed, "I hope it wasn't because of me."

Harris eventually learned about America House Book Publishers of Baltimore, a small press which prints copies based on demand, rather than provide advance money. It's also known as "just in time" publishing. Researching the financial side of publishing, Harris discovered that 80 percent of all books published today are controlled by 5 percent of the publishing houses.

"Capital Crimes," his second book, is a murder mystery set on the Cape, where Harris worked summers for many years. But the idea for it really came from the Hingham Planning Board.

"My daughter Becky was interning in the Planning office that summer when the board was dealing with the proposed Baker Hill subdivision," recalled Harris. "I attended the hearings, which were better than most sitcoms. There were all these conflicts going on, all this emotional controversy. So I thought 'what if the planning board member who casts the critical vote ends up murdered on the construction site?' I started taking lots of notes at the meetings. Eventually a board member asked me if I was going to run for office."

Writing and publishing "Capital Crimes" was easier because of the lessons Harris learned with "Goodbye Dearie."

"I had no trouble marketing 'Capital Crimes' once it was published," by America House, said the former sales pro for Crest, Bounty and Jif. "I went to several bookstores on the Cape with my bag of books and display cards, and the owners were quite receptive." He talked about the book on several Cape and South Shore drive-time radio and local access cable shows.

He joined Hingham Rotary after giving the club a speech, then ended up selling ads for the Rotary phonebook. "Through Rotary I met a local 'one man show' public relations guy, Norm Crawley, in the business since 1955 and knew everybody," said Harris. "He really helped."

But Harris and his muse still had more ideas, more stories to write. He wrote "Blood Feud" ("it's still in the drawer") after reading newspaper accounts of a North Shore supermarket chain family's court battle over money. He's currently working on "Reunion," about a fellow who attends his high school reunion, and "Diary of a Madhouse Husband," about a man who retires and hasn't really planned for it.

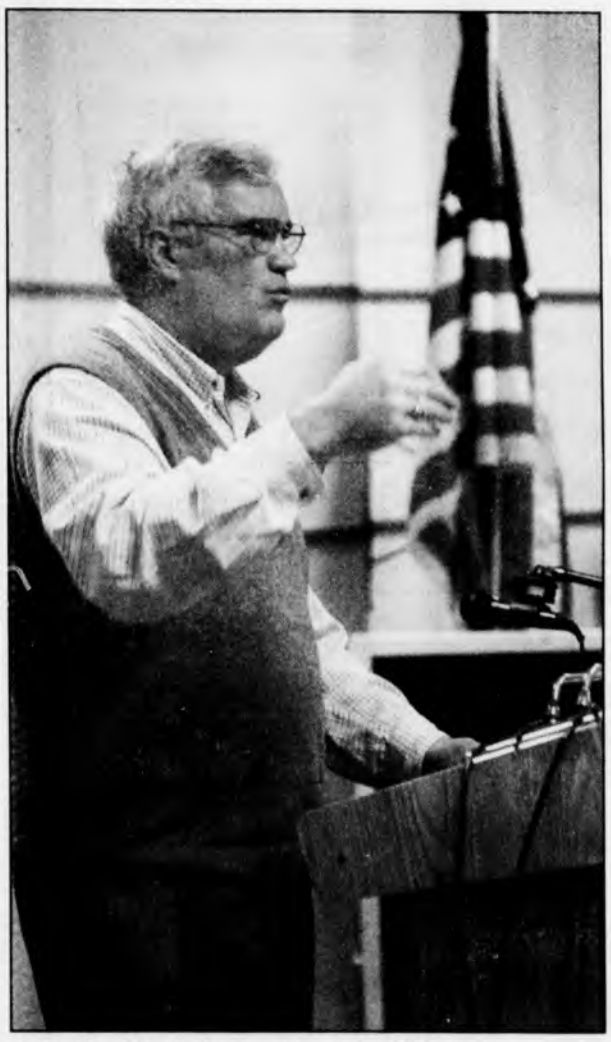
Hingham author Dan Harris speaks to the South Shore Writers Club at the Rockland Public Library.



Author Dan Harris shares writing and publishing tips.

And that screenplay? "I have a six-month option to a Hollywood producer to write a screenplay for 'Goodbye Dearie'," he explained. "I have to condense a 400-page book into about 120 pages and I'm already over. The Final Draft software helps enormously. We'll see what happens."

Harris tries to write in his office every day between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. when his wife Joy comes home from her teaching job in Cohasset. "Even if it's for a couple of hours a day, I do it," he said.

"I take breaks to fold the laundry or go rollerblading, and treat myself to Dunkin' Donuts coffee late in the morning." He writes longhand because he "types four words a minute with 100 percent error. I mail the copies to a college student and family friend who's been transcribing for me since high school, and she e-mails the finished work back."

Harris outlines chapters after writing instead of beforehand, and writes four chapters at a time. "I don't get too tied up in the rules."

His wife Joy, who also majored in English, proofreads the chapters line by line. "She's one of my biggest fans and a grammarian, too."

Harris told the writers group that he avoids the four conventional wisdoms for writers.

1. "Don't just start with a filler article, then stair step up to a novel. Instead, have a story idea that could be a novel."

2. "Don't publish without an agent. I published my books twice solo by researching publishing houses though The Writers Market and The Writers Digest."

3. "Even with an agent it's hard to get published but not impossible. Claire Cook, a first-time writer from Scituate has had two successful books published."

4. "You must know the craft of writing (and all the rules). You don't need to be Strunk and White to write a novel! If you have a good proofreader and editor, just let it rip!"

He also advised club members to sharpen their listening skills in places like coffee shops and jot down lines to use in future dialogue.

"Above all, stick with what you know, complete the first draft before re-writing, and have tenacity and a good attitude," he said.

Harris has become friends with and encouraged by local independent bookstore owners such as Bookport and Buttonwood Books. "Most of these bookstores are run by women, who displayed my books in the window and really helped with distribution."

Harris arrived with copies of his novels and the writer's digest to help aspiring writers.

The hills of the South Shore will be alive with "The Sound of Music" during May, when the Cohasset Dramatic Club presents its own production of the classic Rodgers and Hammerstein musical.

"People just really enjoy 'The Sound of Music.' They fall in love in with the story, the romantic fantasy, the very real drama, and, of course, the beautiful songs," according to Anne Thornton who stars as the postulant Maria Rainer in the Cohasset staging.

Set in Salzburg, Austria, in the late 1930s, "The Sound of Music" is the story of Maria, who proves to high-spirited for religious life and is dispatched to serve as governess for the seven children of the widowed naval Captain Georg von Trapp. Maria soon captures the Captain's heart and the pair are married. Not long after returning from their honeymoon, they learn that the Nazis have invaded

'Been There, Done That' and lived to sing about it

Sarah deLima, Cheryl McMahon and Paula Markowicz ham it up in the musical comedy revue "Been There, Done That, (Can I Get Directions?): Tales From the Trenchess of Motherhood" presented by JM Productions Dinner Theatre at Raffael's in Quincy.

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Sarah deLima has appeared at the Huntington, American Repertory and North Shore Music Theatres, but the actress and singer knows that the only sure way to get a job is to hire herself.

With that in mind, deLima joined forces with friends and fellow actresses Leigh Barrett and Cheryl McMahon to create the musical comedy revue "Been There, Done That, (Can I Get Directions?): Tales From The Trenches of Motherhood" being presented by JM Productions Dinner Theatre at Raffael's in North Quincy, May 7-9, and at the Company Theatre in Norwell from May 10-11.

The whole show works really well, because it offers something that just about everyone can identify with. It's not just the story of women and mothers, it's also about the bond between parents and children."

"Been There, Done That" cast member, Paula Markowicz

"Leigh, Cheryl and I had always wanted to do something together," deLima explained by telephone last week from her Cohasset home. "We finally just accepted that the only way we could all work together was if we formed our own company and wrote our own show. We created this particular show, because motherhood is what we all have in common. We've been doing this as a tribute to mothers for a few years now under our company banner, WOHO, which stands for We Only Hire Ourselves."

Under the direction of Peter Carey of Randolph, the revue looks at motherhood from a variety of angles using original monologues and also music from "A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum," "Cabaret," "Gypsy," "Baby!," and "Big".

Asian noodle soup

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

I have made almost every kind of home-style soup imaginable and often serve soup as a main course with a good loaf of store-bought bread and fruit for dessert. Once in a while, even I get a taste for something out of the ordinary which means that I turn to Asian soups for inspiration. The basic drill is to start with a broth, add noodles and vegetables, and then top with thinly sliced meat. It's a full meal in a bowl. The problem? Well, canned beef broth is virtually inedible, the vegetables are often insipid, and odd flavorings creep into the mix in the name of creativity. Most of all, I wanted this to be an American recipe, one without ingredients that only exist in Asian specialty stores.

After consulting a variety of Asian cookbooks (including the incomparable Hot Sour Salty Sweet by Jeffrey Alford and Naomi Duguid), I set out to produce a decent quick broth. Since canned beef stock is a culinary black hole, I began with canned chicken stock and water, ending up with four cups broth to two cups water. Garlic seemed obvious and I added a few smashed cloves along with about four nickel-sized pieces of sliced ginger and let the broth simmer for about 10 minutes. This was good, but not great, so I upped the garlic to four cloves and the ginger to a 1 1/2-inch piece. Next I experimented with soy and fish sauce, finally settling on one tablespoon of each. (If you think fish sauce is too exotic, use four teaspoons of soy.) A half-teaspoon of sugar was next. Star anise and cinnamon were fine, but optional ingredients. A long list of other ingredients including peppercorns, jalapeno, and scallions were tested and rejected in favor of this simple broth which tasted best when simmered for only 10 minutes.

As for the noodles, rice noodles are common in this type of dish and they worked just fine, especially the flat noodles which are easier to pick up with chopsticks. (Other noodles include wheat, egg, soba, and udon noodles. Of these, I am partial to soba [buckwheat] noodles for this soup.) For the beef, there are two approaches: slice it raw and let the soup do the cooking or cook it ahead of time to develop the flavor. My solution was to do both. I seasoned a piece of sirloin and seared until very brown on both sides. Then I thinly sliced the beef, which was still raw-looking in the center, and fanned slices over the noodles. Once the broth was ladled the beef finished cooking in the bowl. Now I had the tender texture of raw beef with the flavor of sautéed fried beef.

As for the vegetables, I started with sliced shitake mushrooms which are intensely flavored and cook in very short order in the hot broth. In terms of green vegetables, I liked bok choy, Napa cabbage, and spinach. In all cases I thought it best to let the greens or pods cook slightly in the broth instead of piling them raw into the soup bowls. I found unless you have just the right-shaped bowl it's difficult to get the beef and greens to submerge into the hot broth.

This type of soup is usually garnished with fresh herbs and scallions. (You may also try chopped nuts, sesame seeds, oils or lime juice.) Ingredients I liked included scallions and cilantro as well as basil and/or mint leaves. I was also happy to add a drizzle of sesame oil and chili oil. And a little squeeze of lime added to the freshness of the herbs.

ASIAN BEEF AND NOODLE SOUP

For a more exotic and Vietnamese-style soup, include the optional star anise and cinnamon to the broth.

For the broth:

4 cups low-sodium chicken broth

4 cloves garlic, smashed and peeled

1 1/2" piece fresh ginger cut into 6-8 rounds

1 pod star anise (optional)

1 cinnamon stick, about 3 inches (optional)

1 tablespoon soy sauce

1 tablespoon fish sauce

1/2 teaspoon sugar

To finish the soup:

8 ounces rice noodles, flat fettuccini-size preferred

1 sirloin strip steak, about 12 ounces

3 ounces shitake mushrooms, thinly sliced

5 ounces snap peas or pea pods or 4 cups thinly sliced Napa cabbage or bok choi or steamed spinach

2 scallions, white and green parts, thinly sliced on an angle

1/3 cup loosely packed cilantro leaves

1/3 cup loosely packed basil leaves and/or 1/4 cup loosely packed mint leaves (optional)

Toasted sesame oil for drizzling (optional)

Hot chili oil for drizzling (optional)

Lime wedges (optional)

1. For the broth: Bring all of the ingredients, along with 2 cups of water, to a boil in a medium saucepan over medium-high heat. Reduce heat to maintain a lively simmer and cook, partially covered, for 10 minutes. Remove and discard solids and cover and keep warm.

2. To finish the soup: Bring four quarts of water to a boil. Off heat add the noodles and let sit for 10 to 15 minutes, stirring occasionally. Drain and divide evenly between four large soup bowls. Meanwhile, heat a heavy-duty skillet over medium-high heat. Liberally season the steak on both sides with salt and pepper and place in the hot skillet. Cook without moving until very well browned on first side, about 3 minutes. Turn and brown remaining side, about 5 minutes. Remove to a cutting board and let sit for 5 minutes. Thinly slice against the grain at an angle. Add the mushrooms to the broth and return to a simmer. Add the snap peas or pods or greens and cook for two minutes. If using spinach, cook for one minute. Fan beef slices over the noodles and ladle the broth into the bowls, trying to distribute the vegetables as evenly as possible. Garnish with the scallions and cilantro and serve immediately passing the optional garnishes.

Caring for the landscape in early May

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

The welcome greening of our lawns, gardens and landscapes, highlighted by the appearance of colorful spring-flowering trees and shrubs, has set another planting and growing season in motion. Garden centers are bustling with activity as homeowners eagerly search for new plants to beautify their properties and new products to simplify their yardwork.

Pretty pansies in every color of the rainbow have arrived, their smiling faces irresistible to young and old alike. Truckloads of healthy, robust nursery stock can barely be unloaded quickly enough to satisfy enthusiastic customers desperate to work the soil and perform their annual spring planting ritual.

Now that Mother Nature has granted us drenching April showers, our May flowers should be bountiful, assuming our plants did not drown during the chilly downpours of the past few weeks. Extended periods of dampness in early spring enable the gardener to identify low spots or areas of poor drainage that should be corrected, if at all possible, during the warmer months. Few plants enjoy sitting in soggy soils, particularly during the winter. Once plants have leafed-out and are actively growing, copious quantities of moisture can sometimes be tolerated, but while plants are dormant, standing water often leads to rot as saturated soils deprive the roots of air and the plant suffocates. Alternate freezing and thawing of wet soils may cause autumn transplants to heave out of the soil, exposing the roots to wintry blasts. Poor winter drainage is perhaps the most common cause of perennial plant failures during the winter months.

A well-prepared soil is the key factor in creating a successful garden. The addition of organic materials, including peat moss, leaf mold, well-decomposed cow manure, or compost, will greatly improve the condition of any soil. In heavy, clay soils, organic matter will help to improve drainage. In dry, sandy soils, these additives help to retain moisture and nutrients. In particularly low areas, the construction of mounded or raised beds may be the only option to prevent flooding, especially during the winter months.

Established perennial borders will benefit from an application of compost or fertilizer early in the season. Broadcast an organic fertilizer such as MNLA Plant-O-Ganic (8-8-8) or Espoma Plant-tone (5-3-3) over perennial borders once your cleanup is complete. An occasional application of lime in spring or fall will sweeten acidic amendments. Trees and shrubs will also benefit from a spring application of fertilizer. Spread MNLA Plant-O-Ganic around the base of established trees and shrubs or use Hollytone for acid-loving rhododendrons, azaleas and hollies.

No garden seems complete without spring-flowering bulbs.

No garden seems complete without spring-flowering bulbs. These springtime treasures store nutrients in the outer layers of their underground bulbous structures to produce flowers from season to season. For reliable bloom in subsequent years, snip spent flowers so energy is not wasted producing seedpods. Most importantly, do not remove bulb foliage until it is brown, for this is how the plant manufactures food to carry the bulb through dormancy and produce next year's flowers. An application of fertilizer while these bulbs are actively growing will further assist in their annual return. Water throughout the growing season.

Lawns will benefit from a firm raking in areas where grass is heavily matted or fall leaves linger on the surface, but wait until the ground is reasonably dry to prevent tearing grass plants out of the earth. For sparse lawns, overseed after raking to promote a thicker, denser turf. A thick, healthy lawn is the best way to minimize weeds. Apply a starter fertilizer in areas where seed has been spread as a high nitrogen lawn food may damage tender germinating grass plants. Dethatching and aeration of established lawns is usually best performed in late summer or early autumn except in extreme situations as its removal in spring enables opportunistic weed seeds to populate exposed soil. Spread lime in spring or autumn to maximize the lawn's ability to absorb nutrients from the soil. If you feel that you have become a slave to your mowing your lawn, consider using an organic lawn fertilizer this season. These fertilizers do not burn and provide a long-lasting, slow release feeding that promotes root and side-shoot development for a thick lawn without the rapid top growth that requires frequent mowing during the spring.

Last season's dry conditions took a toll on our lawns and crabgrass flourished in many landscapes spreading thousands of seeds before succumbing to frost. If crabgrass was a problem last season, a crabgrass control may be advantageous this spring and should be applied early in the season before warm temperatures allow crabgrass seeds to germinate. A general rule of thumb is to spread crabgrass controls while forsythia bushes are in bloom as the flowering of this popular shrub and germination of crab grass seed are both triggered by soil temperatures. It should be noted that most of these preemergent controls inhibit germination of desirable grass seeds as well and should not be used in newly seeded areas. Raking and thatch removal should be undertaken prior to applications of crabgrass controls and fertilizers.

The warmth of the springtime sun in conjunction with our abundant moisture should begin to accelerate the sluggish growth of our plants. As tender young leaves emerge on trees and shrubs, our landscapes are gradually draped with a muted veil of soft yellow-green tones. Against this delicate background, bold splashes of vividly tinted flowers will paint a colorful portrait of breathtaking grandeur in the weeks to come.

One of audiences' favorite things

Austria and are demanding the Captain's immediate service in their navy. The family decides then decides to escape over the mountains to Switzerland and freedom.

With music by Richard Rodgers and lyrics by Oscar Hammerstein II, and a book by Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, "The Sound of Music" first opened on Broadway in 1959. With Mary Martin as Maria and Theodore Bikel as the Captain, the show went on to win seven Tony Awards, including Best Musical. The 1965 film, starring Julie Andrews and Christopher Plummer, earned five Academy Awards — including Best Picture and Best Actress for Andrews — and went on to become one of the most successful movie musicals of all time.

"It seems like almost everyone has seen the movie," Thornton acknowledged by telephone from her Hanover home last week. "I'm definitely no Julie Andrews, but I think everybody will enjoy our production just the same."

Like the 1998 Broadway revival, the Cohasset Dramatic Club production will include the original Rodgers and Hammerstein music, plus two songs written by Richard Rodgers for the film version, "I Have Confidence" and "Something Good." Two songs from the original score which were not in the film, "How Can Love Survive?" and "There's No Way to Stop It" are also included.

"It is wonderful to be able to do the songs from the movie on stage," explains Thornton. "We're very lucky, too, because we have so many terrific singers in our cast. Our nuns are even played by members of a local chorus and they are just great."

The title song may be the show's best-known number, but Thornton likes another even more.

"My favorite song is "Something Good" from the movie. Maria sings it to the Captain when they're falling in love and it is just beautiful."

Thornton is aware that aware that audiences often arrive for productions of "The Sound of Music" with a pretty clear idea of what they want.

"People expect to hear music they're very familiar with like "My Favorite Things," "Climb Ev'ry Mountain," and "Edelweiss." This isn't experimental theater by any means. The story gives it almost universal appeal," says Thornton. "My husband's a real man's man and this is still his favorite show."

(The Cohasset Dramatic Club will present "The Sound Of Music" — complete with a 45-member cast under the direction of Hull's Jessica McDonald and with a 10-piece band led by Scituate's Rosemarie Gentile - at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Avenue, May 2-3, 9-10, 16-17 at 7:30 PM and May 4, 11 and 18 at 2 PM. Tickets may be purchased at Buttonwood Books and Springbrook Kids in Cohasset, at the Front Street Bookstore in Scituate or by telephone at 781/544-0304. A senior citizen discount is available for the May 4 matinee only. Girl Scout leaders interested in purchasing tickets for their troops should contact 781/383-1834.)

'Been There, Done That' and lived to sing about it

"We do skits, songs and spoofs that we hope are very funny, and we also have more serious moments when we share personal experiences," says deLima, a mother of four grown children and a fixture on the greater Boston theater and cabaret scenes.

When Barrett was cast in the current New Rep production of "Sweeney Todd," her co-stars and co-creators tapped Holbrook native and current East Bridgewater resident Paula (Morrissey) Markowicz to replace her for the Raffael's and Company Theatre dates.

"I had seen the show a few years ago at the Barker Tavern in Scituate, and I thought it was adorable, funny and also quite touching," explained Markowicz by telephone earlier this week.

The mother of one daughter, Markowicz has appeared locally with the Company Theatre and the Family Performing Arts Center. Her current assignment, however, marks the first time she has had to use her own life experiences on stage.

"It's been really interesting to work on this show," says Markowicz. "This piece really allows audience to get to know the performers. Sarah and Cheryl have encouraged me to share my own stories, which is great. There are also vignettes in which I am playing different characters opposite the other woman as they tell their stories. The whole show works really well, because it offers something that just about everyone can identify with. It's not just the story of women and mothers, it's also about the bond between parents and children."

And the many emotions that go along with those relationships, too.

"When I first started learning the show, my biggest concern was that I would get choked up onstage like I did when I was in the audience," recalls Markowicz. "It's funny, but also very moving at the same time. When Cheryl sings "I Won't Mind," which is about an aunt who doesn't have children of her own, it always gets to me. It is a very sweet song and Cheryl performs it just beautifully."

("Been There, Done That (Can I Get Directions?): Tales From The Trenches of Motherhood" will be presented May 7-9 by JM Productions Dinner Theatre at Raffael's, One Enterprise Drive, North Quincy. For tickets and information, call 617/328-1600 or visit www.raffaels.com. The show will be presented May 10-11 at the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell. For tickets to these performances, call 781/871-2787 or visit www.companytheatre.com.)

May is Mother and Daughter's Month for Cohasset pair

Sarah deLima will be busy during the next few weeks with her "Been There, Done That" appearances, but not too busy to pass up the chance to appear with her daughter, Kate deLima, in the Fiddlehead Theatre Company's production of Oscar Wilde's "The Importance of Being Earnest."

"I'm thrilled to have this chance to work with my daughter, especially since years ago I played, Gwendolyn, the role Kate now has at Fiddlehead, It will be great fun for us to play opposite each other as the plotting mother and the daughter being plotted against." says deLima.

This time around, the elder deLima will tackle the role of Lady Bracknell in the fast-paced romantic comedy about a plotting mother, a governess with a romantic streak and the requisite star crossed lovers.

(The Fiddlehead Theatre Company will present "The Importance of Being Earnest," May 2-11, at The Norwood Theater, 109 Central Street, Norwood. For tickets and information, call 781/762-4060.)

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

ASSISTIVE-LISTENING DEVICES

Assistive-listening devices are products other than hearing instruments that help people understand speech, use the telephone, send messages, and be alerted to important sounds. For instance, there are wireless FM systems that amplify the sound of the television without turning up the volume on the set. The transmitter sits near the TV, and the receiver attaches to headphones. The user can adjust the volume on the headphones while others in the room can listen at their normal TV volume. TTYs are terminals used for two-way text conversation over a telephone line. They are a primary tool used by the deaf and hard-of-hearing for telephone conversation. The new generation of TTYs is more portable and can be used with cell phones.

There are many tools available today to help the hearing impaired not miss out on the sounds of life. Visit FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER to ask questions and get answers. Our staff can bring you up to date on the latest technological advances in the hearing aid industry, from assistive listening devices to virtually invisible instruments, even tiny batteries. Why not call today, 781-337-1144, and arrange a free, comprehensive, painless hearing test at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits, and Mass Health.

P.S. There are also wireless alerting devices available that let people know when the baby cries, the smoke detector goes off, or the doorbell rings.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30

The dark side of a new moon is a time for letting go, cleaning out and finishing old business. Spend time alone. Nurture your spirit; meditate, listen to music, rest and unwind. At 2:12 a.m. the Aries moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. The final windup to the new moon begins at 10:26 a.m., when the moon enters Taurus. Slow down and avoid conflicts with others between 7:25-10:25 p.m., when the moon and Mars align.

THURSDAY, MAY 1

The month of May begins and ends with a new moon. The full moon on the fifteenth and the new moon on the thirty-first are accompanied by eclipses, adding force and intensity. Mercury continues retrograde travel until the twentieth, placing all important decisions and purchases off limits until then.

Today the new moon culminates at 8:15 a.m., 11-degrees of the sign Taurus. The moon aligns with Neptune; and Venus, the planetary ruler of Taurus, prepares to interact with Neptune. This combination generates an easygoing, relaxed mood. Creativity and artistic sensitivity are at an all-time high. Romance is the name of the game this evening.

FRIDAY, MAY 2

The Taurus moon aligns with Mercury at 1:27 a.m. and becomes inactive until this evening. Venus forms a harmonious contact to Neptune at 9:02 a.m., setting a laid-back pace. In addition, the sun prepares to form a 90-degree alignment to Neptune. Keep it light. Don't take anything too seriously. This is a wonderful day to relax and unwind. Be more creative; enjoy favorite hobbies, spend quality time with loved ones. If you have work projects to accomplish, finish old business rather than starting anything new. At 11:27 p.m. the moon enters versatile Gemini.

SATURDAY, MAY 3

This weekend can go either way. Avoid rigid plans and time schedules. There are likely to be unexpected delays or distractions. On the other hand, this can be an exciting weekend, if you are more spontaneous and adventurous. The moon travels in Gemini, and Mercury, the planetary ruler of Gemini, travels in retrograde motion. Today the sun forms a 90-degree alignment to Neptune at 8:19 p.m. Put recent worries and pressures on the back burner. Let fun and games top your agenda.

SUNDAY, MAY 4

Read yesterday's advice. There is one rough spot in effect between 12:46-3:46 p.m., when the moon opposes Pluto. Steer clear of emotional thunderstorms. Choose your words carefully. Insensitive or indiscreet remarks may come back to haunt you. Keep it light. Go with the flow. Concentrate on relaxing and enjoying life to the fullest.

MONDAY, MAY 5

Gear up for a hectic morning. Take it slow and easy. Allow extra time to get where you are going. The Gemini moon aligns with Saturn at 4:43 a.m. and becomes inactive. A Cancer moon takes over at 11:42 a.m., and forms a harmonious contract to Uranus at 4:26 p.m. This afternoon is prime for making renovations, remodeling, repainting, or just thinking about what you can do to beautify and improve your home.

TUESDAY, MAY 6

Today's planetary patterns are great for handling projects around your home. Because Mercury travels in retrograde motion, you should not make major purchases of appliances or furniture. You can, however, make improvements or repairs or tackle major cleanup jobs. This time is also favorable for improving the quality of key relationships. Be more nurturing and sensitive to the needs of others. Open the doors to a higher level of communication .

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7

The Cancer moon aligns with Venus at 12:21 a.m. and becomes inactive until this evening. The sun aligns with retrograde Mercury at 3:21 a.m. Take extra time out for yourself this morning; look within for answers. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Pluto adds depth and intensity to today's planetary picture. You can achieve breakthroughs creatively and express yourself in new ways. At 9:46 p.m. the moon enters Leo. Fun and games are back in the picture.

THURSDAY, MAY 8

A polarity of Mars and Jupiter takes the spotlight today, warning you to cool your heels. Don't jump into anything. The Leo moon underscores its influence, when it interacts with Jupiter and Mars this afternoon. This combination generates good feelings, high energy. On the other hand, look before you leap. There may be a tendency to overdo, overextend your resources, act foolishly. A lunar opposition to Neptune affects this evening. Kick back, enjoy; don't take anything or anyone too seriously.

FRIDAY, MAY 9

Astrological blue skies and sunshine prevail. Try to get work projects out of the way early in the day, so that you can enjoy the remainder. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 7:53 a.m. A potent full moon is building up and will culminate May 15. The Leo moon forms harmonious contacts to Pluto, Venus and Saturn until 11:13 p.m., when it becomes inactive.

Not all sold on affordable housing plan

Debate continues at June meeting

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

A draft of an affordable housing plan for Cohasset received mixed reviews Tuesday night from Selectmen and the Planning Board.

Rick Swanborg, chairman of the Growth and Development Committee, presented the plan in what was the first of two or three public hearings on the document. Swanborg's committee has drafted the affordable housing plan as part of the housing portion of the town's master plan.

The affordable housing plan seeks to meet the mandate set by Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, which says a town must have 10 percent of its housing stock be affordable. Cohasset now has 2.76 percent affordable housing.

The affordable housing plan states that its goal is to develop "an annual average of 21 units of housing over 10 years, which constitutes 0.75 percent of the 2000 census year-round units (2,752)." Under new 40B regulations, if the town could achieve that average growth rate in affordable units, it could fend off any applications for comprehensive permits from 40B developers.

To reach its goal, the plan recommends the formation of the Cohasset Housing Partnership, a select group of volunteers that would identify plots of land for development, evaluate affordable housing proposals and work with developers to assure that the housing is "consistent with town character."

While most Selectmen and Planning Board members seemed to agree that the Housing Partnership was a good idea, they differed in opinion

Boaters enjoy a day on the Gulf River, which is the subject of a new book..

A river runs through it

Resident creates colorful book on the Gulf River

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

John Hartshorne fell in love with the Gulf River 14 years ago when he moved into his home on Border Street. As a member of the Gulf Association, he has worked for years to try to protect what he sees as one of Cohasset's and Scituate's most valuable natural resources.

To that end, last year, Hartshorne gave a slideshow on the history of the Gulf River to fellow members of the Gulf Association. Now, with the help of Noble's Camera Shop, he has turned that presentation into a colorful book.

"A History of the Gulf River" is a 15-page read that follows the river from the days when Native Americans inhabited its banks to when use of the river expanded during colonial times. It incorporates color photographs of the river and its surrounding landmarks, as captured by Jim Spelman of Scituate, the current president of the Gulf Association.

Hartshorne, a past president of the organization and now the vice president, said that so many people enjoyed the slide show a year ago that he decided to transfer it into book form.

The book covers interesting figures like Mordecai Lincoln, who built three dams on the Gulf River's tributaries and was the great-great-great grandfather of President Abraham Lincoln.

Hartshorne explores how salt hay from the marshes was a major commodity in the colonial era He also gives some of the history behind the oldest houses that line the river's banks. Interestingly enough, the river's original name, the "Conyhassit," was also the Indian word for the area's long, rocky shore. Eventually, that word would lend the town of Cohasset its name.

Original children's musical takes the stage this summer

Deveney sisters start 15th season

By Samantha Brown
CORRESPONDENT

When the curtain goes up on this summer's Children's Drama Workshop production, co-founders and sisters Beth, Grace and Sarah Deveney will have cause to celebrate. Not only will this performance commemorate the 15-year anniversary of the program, it also marks a great accomplishment for Beth, who has written this year's musical comedy, "Jack Beanstalk."

"We stress that every part is really important. Everyone needs to feel like they've accomplished something, and they do."
— Beth Deveney

Beth became involved in theater and the arts at a very young age, and was only 12 years old when she and her sisters began holding the summer program in their garage. She held roles in many performances while attending Cohasset High School, and then went on to earn an arts and sciences degree in music from Catholic University in Washington, DC. It wasn't until after graduation that she began to see writing as her calling. "I've kept a journal since I was five; practically my whole life," she said. "I never thought of myself as a writer until after college."

For Beth, the Children's Drama Workshop has provided a wonderful creative outlet to sharpen her skills as both a writer and producer. Three years ago, she made her first attempt at an original piece with "Cinderella Smith," an updated version of the classic Cinderella story, and discovered what she now knows to be her "number one passion."

"I think dialogue is where my strength is," she said, and as with any craft, she is constantly working on the perfection of the art form. She is currently working part time at Harvard University, to allow as much time as possible for writing, which made "Jack Beanstalk" possible. From conceptual-

Dept. of corrections

Due to a misleading document from the Zoning Board of Appeals, an article in the Mariner on April 24 incorrectly reported that the Zoning Board of Appeals denied variances in 1992 in connection with an attempt to build a doctor's office on a property at 226 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, owned by Joseph Rosano.

In fact, Dr. Roger Pompeo, who was considering purchasing the property from Rosano, was granted, with conditions, a special permit to change the lot's use so as to accommodate a doctor's office and a couple of apartments. Pompeo, however, abandoned his plans and never purchased the land.

Rosano is now again seeking a special permit to change the use of the property, from a earth materials storage site to a house with office space and two one-bedroom apartments. Rosano has said he is still entitled to apply for the permit, but members of the Zoning Board have said that a recently approved bylaw now makes a variance necessary for any change of use. A variance would require proof that the property suffers from a hardship, but the Zoning Board has consistently said in the past that no hardship is present. Rosano's case will go before the Zoning Board of Appeals on May 19.

The Mariner also incorrectly reported on April 24 that the new public bathrooms at Mariner's Park on Parker Avenue would be open from sunrise to sunset. In fact, the Town has not yet decided the hours of the bathrooms. The mistake was the result of a ZBA decision that was provided to the Mariner but later amended.

Selectmen drafting position on Avalon

Selectmen are drafting a position on Avalon Bay's proposed 200-unit apartment complex off Route 3A. Town Manager Mark Haddad presented a first draft of the document to selectmen at their meeting on April 30. It included information gathered by Town Financial Director Mike Buckley regarding the impact that Avalon would have on town services.

Selectmen will make additions to the document and present a final version to the Zoning Board of Appeals at its meeting with Avalon Bay on May 20. Selectman Chairman Ronnie McMorris suggested that the Selectmen should request that if Avalon is approved, residents, their children and town employees should get preference for all affordable units.

Public trash cans not for private use

Selectman Merle Brown warned residents at the April 30 selectmen's meeting not to put household trash in public trash receptacles. Brown said public trash cans at the Beechwood baseball field and in Cohasset Village had been found to contain excessive amounts of household trash. He said the act is punishable by a fine of at least $100.

2003 - 2004 school schedule adopted

The School Committee has adopted the schedule for the 2003 - 2004 school year. The first day of classes for Cohasset Public Schools will be Wednesday, Sept. 3, 2003. The final day of classes will be Thursday, June 17, 2004. The School Committee chose this schedule over another which had the same start date, but added two days to the Holiday Break and thus moved the final day of classes back to Monday, June 21. Under that schedule, Holiday Break would have begun after school on Friday, Dec. 19. Under the chosen schedule, it will begin after classes on Tuesday, Jan. 23.

School Committee members said the schedule they chose would allow more room for snow days to be made up without extending school too far into summer.

Summer busing program approved

Cohasset's fleet of school buses will be available for transportation this summer at a competitive cost.

The School Committee voted to approve a program where buses (and licensed drivers) can be rented for transportation to summer activities. The price of rental will be set at $2 less than the "going rate," which figures to be somewhere between $35 and $45.

School Bus Coordinator Peggy Litchfield said the program will attract customers because of its low cost and lack of a minimum rental time. The School Committee approved the program for this summer only, after which point it will be reviewed. The committee is hoping that profit generated by the program will help offset the cost of maintenance on the buses during the school year.

Town forum will be a first

Brainstorming is meeting's focus

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Members from more than 25 boards, committees and commissions will attend a town-wide forum on Tuesday where they will discuss issues affecting the Town.

The forum will take place May 13 at 7 p.m. at the Lightkeeper's Residence on Government Island. Selectmen have invited all elected and appointed town officials to attend. The meeting is open to the public.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris, who came up with the idea for the forum along with Selectman Merle Brown, said she hoped it would allow for people to "brainstorm" about possible solutions to problems facing the town.

"Merle and I have been thinking about doing this for years," said McMorris, who has sat on the Board of Selectmen since 1996. "Hopefully, we'll come up with some ideas that will help us run the town better."

McMorris said the forum will offer a nice alternative to Town Meeting, where she said people often want to voice opinions but may find the agenda to be "too precise."

"We just had that general idea: Let's bring all the people together, open the lines of communication and see where it goes…I'm not really sure where it will go, but we'll leave that up to the people who come," she said.

Brown said at the forum each board or committee will have a chance to say "what they do, what their problems are and what they'd like to see in the town in the future."

"One of the problems in anything is communication, and the best way have good communication is to get everybody in the same room," he said.

McMorris said there was no doubt that the town's financial situation would be one of the issues debated at the forum. Other topics could include affordable housing, the downtown revitalization, harbor improvements or the master plan.

If the forum is a success, McMorris and Brown said they would consider organizing two per year.

McMorris said the forum would improve communication between town officials, a trend she said has been happening steadily since she began as a selectman seven years ago. She credited Town Manager Mark Haddad, saying his work to coordinate efforts between different boards and committees had played a critical role.

John 'Moose' Winters was one of a kind

Harbormaster will be missed

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Flags across town are at half mast today as Cohasset mourns the loss of the man known as "Moose." Harbormaster John H. Winters III died Tuesday after a 17-month bout with pancreatic cancer. He was 60.

Friends and family members remembered Winters, a lifelong Cohasset resident, for his sense of humor, his willingness to help out and his ever-present smile.

"He was genuine. He was one of a kind," said his wife, Joanne. "He was a true son of Cohasset."

Winters' two daughters, Rory, 25, and Nancy, 18, said their father was the ultimate role model.

"He is the one person against whom I measure everyone I meet, for his respectful nature, his kindness and his generosity," said Ruth. "Everything I knew, I learned from my father."

"He was the most loyal of friends to everyone," said Nancy. "He covered their backs and they depended on him. He loved Cohasset, and all who knew him considered the harbor Moose's."

Winters became harbormaster in 1995 after many years as a Cohasset lobsterman. Aside from excelling in the day-to-day tasks of the position, he was instrumental in securing permits for the harbor dredging project in 1998. When that project was completed, he helped get state funding to renovate the harbor docks.

"He was a hands on harbormaster — ready to go," said Asst. Harbormaster John Muncey, who knew Winters for more than 30 years. "It was fun," Muncey said of working with Winters. "We got a lot of work done but we had fun doing it."

Cohasset Harbormaster John "Moose" Winters passed away this week.

Lorren Gibbons, who is both an Asst. Harbormaster and a lobsterman, said Winters had sense of patience and an ability to deal with others that was unparalleled. "He was always willing to help other boaters, even if they were just having a problem rigging their sails," she said.

Gibbons met Winters in 1978 when she purchased his 23-foot lobster boat and began her lobstering career. She said lobstermen and fishermen in Cohasset couldn't have been happier when Winters was named harbormaster.

"They loved him. They thought he was great. He had the respect of all of them," she said.

Born in Providence, R.I., Winters was raised and educated in Cohasset. He graduated from the Maine Maritime Academy in 1966 and served three tours of duty with the Merchant Marines during the Vietnam War.

Returning from Vietnam, Winters worked as a First Engineer with Grace Lines of New York. He later left that position to become a full-time lobsterman in Cohasset.

"Moose was a great person," said Police Chief Robert Jackson, a longtime friend of Winters. "He served his country honorably. He'll be sorely missed."

Town Manager Mark Haddad praised Winters for his accomplishments as harbormaster, but said, "I didn't just consider him the harbormaster. I considered him a friend."

Haddad said Winters show exceptional strength and determination in his fight against cancer. "He never, ever was down. He always had a smile on his face," he said.

Selectman Merle Brown called for a moment of silence to remember Winters at the Selectmen's meeting on Tuesday night. "He's been a very good source for the harbor," said Brown. "It's sad to see John go."

A memorial service will be held Wednesday, May 14 at 11 a.m. at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset.

Open Space seeks some new members

The Open Space Advisory Committee is seeking several new members. The committee is responsible for implementing recommendations in the Open Space Plan, including identifying properties to conserve that will protect Cohasset's water supply, wetlands, wildlife habitats and scenic resources. The committee will also be working on other recommendations in the plan including greater opportunities for walking and bicycling, improved access to the waterfront, and access to recreational resources for the disabled. Recently, many members worked on the Barnes property acquisition.

The committee welcomes new members who are prepared to "roll up their sleeves" and make a difference. If you are interested in learning more, please contact Debbie Cook at 781-383-6313 or cookmc@attbi.com

Not everyone is sold on affordable housing plan

about the three bylaw changes recommended in the plan.

One change would be to allow by-right apartments in the Downtown Business District, "including the addition of two to three stories on existing one-story buildings while preserving street level retail uses." Incentives would be offered to make the apartments affordable. The apartments are allowed by special permit now, but the feeling of the Growth and Development Committee is that the permitting process is a deterrent to any new apartments being built.

Planning Board member Bob Sturdy criticized the proposed bylaw, saying three- or four-story buildings in the village would not be in the character of the town. He also said the additions would require that a building be brought up to code, which he said in some cases would force the razing of the entire building. Bringing the building up to code was the deterrent, Sturdy said, not the special permit.

A second bylaw change suggested by the affordable housing plan would give amnesty to illegal apartments in exchange for affordability agreements. The so-called "amnesty" bylaw was removed from the warrant on the floor of Town Meeting in March to allow for further review.

Selectman Michael Sullivan questioned the bylaw change almost immediately after Swanborg introduced it as part of the affordable housing plan. "There you go, throwing out all zoning again," said Sullivan.

But Selectman Tom Callahan said Sullivan did not fully understand the bylaw, adding that it would not change anything that did not already exist in town. Sullivan, however, cautioned against zoning changes, saying that most residents wanted to preserve their neighborhoods.

A final bylaw change suggested by the affordable housing plan would allow for incentive or inclusionary zoning. Under this new regulation, the town could require that a subdivision set aside a percentage of its housing as affordable, or in lieu of that, make a payment to an affordable housing trust.

Between 1990 and 2000, the percentage of residents ages 25 to 34 dropped 31 percent, from 13.5 to 8.7 percent of the population.

Callahan, who is also a member of the Growth and Development Committee, said the latter of the two situations was more likely because subdivisions in Cohasset were usually too small to require that 10 to 20 percent of the units be made affordable.

Sullivan was skeptical about the town meeting its annual goal for new affordable units. "To say we're going to get 21 units of affordable housing into town each year, when we don't even get 20 units of normal housing each year, is unrealistic," he said.

Swanborg admitted the town was in a difficult situation. "We're kind of between a rock and a hard place...And maybe the state anticipated that," he said.

Callahan and Swanborg said encouraging small-scale projects that are 100 percent affordable was far more beneficial than large-scale 40B projects. Indeed, all units in a 40B rental project would count to the town's affordable housing stock. However, in a 40B project where units were for sale, if 20 percent were made affordable, only about half of those would actually increase the town's percentage of affordable housing. The other half would offset the new market-rate homes in the project.

Aside from bylaw changes, other ideas floated by the affordable housing plan included seeking funding, technical assistance and loans from the Massachusetts Housing Partnership, working with developers to develop affordable senior housing in the Senior Overlay District, and exploring the possibility of purchasing existing multi-family units to be made affordable.

Also being considered is the institution of a first-time home buying program in coordination with local banks. Swanborg said such a program would help younger people buy their first home in Cohasset, something that statistics seem to show is happening less and less. According to figures in the affordable housing plan, between 1990 and 2000, the percentage of residents ages 20 to 24 dropped 53 percent, from 5.4 percent of the total population to 2.2 percent. Meanwhile, the percentage of residents ages 25 to 34 dropped 31 percent, from 13.5 to 8.7 percent of the population.

Selectmen agreed to continue the hearing on the affordable housing plan at their first meeting in June. The board hopes to have feedback on the plan from both the Planning Board and the Zoning Board by that time.

After the meeting, Callahan offered an explanation for the opposition to the bylaw changes. "I don't think there's a divide. I just think everybody is cautious about the impact of what we want to do. Everything has a consequence," he said. "Part of it is that people don't like anything that we have to do because they think we're being forced into this."

Selectman Fred Koed said he supported measure like the amnesty bylaw because they would integrate affordable housing throughout the community and make the town more diverse. He said opposition to the affordable housing plan was only natural. "Not everybody's going to like these proposals but the other option is to let these 40B projects steamroll into town, and I think the residents have said they don't want that," he said.

New counselor to be hired at Middle School

HS art teacher will be laid off

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

At the recommendation of school administrators, the School Committee has decided to lay off a High School art teacher next year so a Middle School guidance counselor can be hired.

Middle-High School principal Mike Jones suggested the move in response to a task force report that revealed parents were concerned by the fact that a Middle School adjustment counselor would be laid off next year.

School administrators originally anticipated that they would be able to live without the adjustment counselor, but only for one year, after which point a new counselor would be hired. The cut was one of a few layoffs that the School Committee agreed upon in its fiscal year 2004 budget, which was approved at Town Meeting in March.

Jones said the new counselor would be a "generalist" who would provide academic counseling, crisis intervention and assistance with special education.

The School Committee voted four to one to support the move. Committee member Mark DeGiacomo cast the lone dissenting vote, saying he agreed with the initial decision to hire the counselor after next school year.

Jones said the new counselor would be a "generalist" who would provide academic counseling, crisis intervention and assistance with special education.

Committee member Chartis Tebbetts said the move was warranted because the recently released 10-year school accreditation report suggested the need for more counseling positions at CMHS. Research for that report was conducted before the School Committee agreed to lay off an adjustment counselor next year.

Jones said another reason in support of the move was that the school was closing in on the recommended 300-to-one student-counselor ratio. "We may not be able to meet our legal requirement to provide counseling," he said.

Jones added the new counseling position would help students with the transition period that will accompany new grade arrangement at CMHS. Hiring someone next year, he said, would allow the counselor to get to know students for a full school year before grades are rearranged in the fall of 2004.

Because of the elimination of a High School art teacher, some students will likely have to reschedule their course load for next year. He said there are 320 students signed up for 10 different art courses but did not say how many of those courses would be cancelled.

School Committee member Pat Martin suggested looking at more creative ways to hire art teachers. She said the High School should look into "distant learning" programs or perhaps hiring someone from the South Shore Art Center on a stipend. Committee Chairman Rick Flynn said offering more opportunities for independent study could be a another solution.

Postal workers collect for food pantry

Cohasset Post Office workers will again be working for be Cohasset Food Pantry on Saturday, May 10, when residents are being asked to leave food and household supplies by their mailboxes to be picked up by mail carriers for eventual delivery to the pantry.

"This is a wonderful public service by the postal workers," Marjorie Steele, head of the Food Pantry operation, says. "In just this one day it virtually stocks our shelves for the summer, making sure we're able to meet the needs of a number of Cohasset families for non-perishable food and household items. Townspeople have responded generously in the past and we know they will again on Saturday."

In each of past years postal workers have collected more than two tons of food and staples. This year's drive is being organized by Andy Lavoine, with the encouragement and support of Postmaster Stephen Cabezas and Supervisor James Polito.

Steele and her associate Moira Stansell, say the Pantry is especially in need of such food items as juice boxes, salad dressings, pasta sauce, canned fruit and vegetables, coffee and tea, cereals and baked beans. Equally needed are staples such as dishwashing liquids, laundry detergents and paper products. Outdated items, corroded cans, unsealed packages and perishable goods should not be donated.

The carriers pick up the items as they deliver the mail, bring them to the Post Office where they are weighed. Other volunteers sort the items and then bring them to the Pantry, which now is located in the rear of the parsonage of St. Anthony's Church, where they are shelved and stored.

The Pantry is open from 9 to 10 a.m. Tuesdays. Any Cohasset resident with limited income or special needs is eligible to receive food. Cohasset churches, businesses and individuals contribute to the pantry during the year.

Reps agree on four-quad gates

Want MBTA to install them

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, had his way Greenbush would never be built. If state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, had his druthers, train service to Scituate would have been restored years ago.

While the two representatives are on the same side of the political party aisle, they are on opposite sides of the tracks when it comes to restoration of the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad. But they do agree if the train comes, four-quadrant gates should be installed.

Four-quadrant gates use four arms instead of two, and therefore prevent traffic from skirting around a closed gate to beat an oncoming train.

The legislators think it may be necessary to add an amendment to an upcoming Transportation Bond Bill to direct the MBTA to use four-quad gates at Greenbush grade crossings. Although the MBTA has talked about using the gates in the verbiage in the various town mitigation agreements, at this point the transportation agency hasn't agreed to their use and instead is designing crossings with two-quad gates and median strips or channeling devices that would prevent vehicles from being able to pull around to beat a train.

The potential use of the bond bill as a vehicle to enforce the use of four-quad gates follows a week in which both Bradley and Hynes, who joined with fellow state representatives Ronald Mariano, D-Quincy, and James M. Murphy, D-Weymouth, filed anti- and pro-Greenbush amendments to the state budget.

The Hynes-Mariano-Murphy amendment would have streamlined the train's environmental permitting process with the state Department of Environmental Protection; and the Bradley amendment would have stopped the project pending further study of alternatives and cost. Bradley also filed an amendment to study the feasibility of four-quadrant gates.

"Whether the project goes forward or not," Bradley said, "everyone agrees four-quadrant gates are the way to go."

"Whether the project goes forward or not. Everyone agrees four-quadrant gates are the way to go."

— State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham

Amendments to the state budget filed by legislators come in literally by the hundreds and end up before the House Ways & Means Committee, which in this case, decided not to micromanage Greenbush and other transportation projects and the amendments were removed. The local legislators had to option of taking the measures to the floor for debate, but without the backing of Ways & Means, realized the amendments would have scant chance of passing muster.

Before going the route of an amendment to the Transportation Bond bill for four-quad gates, Hynes' office is trying to find out what the status is on a law passed in the early '90s, which was signed by the governor, mandating the gates for the Old Colony Project. Hynes said it appears the issue was subsequently "made less strong."

"We're going to try to find out when and how," he said.

Hynes said four-quadrant gates should be used at Greenbush grade crossings whenever possible because they are safer, unless proven otherwise. Both he and Bradley say the MBTA is balking at using four-quads because of the expense.

"The MBTA has so much as said it is a cost issue," Bradley said.

But Hynes points out, the cost in even one life being saved cannot be measured in dollars and cents.

The federal government is silent on the issue of four-quad gates, which means there is no prohibition on them, and therefore they should be installed, Hynes said.

"The MBTA has in negotiations on the issue since the mid-90s wording that allows the gates unless the federal government says otherwise," he said.

Bradley said the MBTA is apparently saying it will do what the federal government says, and if there is no decision from the federal government, then the agency can take it as a "no" on the four-quad gates.

The Transportation Bond Bill and amendments would be filed in enough time for the gates to be incorporated in the project, on which construction is expected of resume in September after the administration finishes its Greenbush review.

The Plymouth and Middleboro lines (the first two legs of the Old Colony Railroad Restoration Project) started service in September 1997. The 17-mile Greenbush line would return commuter rail service along the coast to Scituate.

Building committee says CMHS lights not too bright

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Neighbors say the new outdoor lighting at the Middle High School is excessive, but School Building Committee Chairman Rob Spofford says it is the minimum amount necessary to protect the town against potential lawsuits.

Spofford, who spoke at last Thursday's School Committee meeting, said the new lighting was designed to provide an average of one foot-candle of lighting across the site. He said the measurement is considered the industry standard and is mandated in ramp areas by the Americans with Disabilities Act. One-foot candle [the amount of light a candle generates one foot away], he added, was comparable to the amount of illumination in the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library parking lot.

Spofford was joined by Gene Raymond of Strekalovsky and Hoit Architects, who displayed plans for the lighting design and helped answer questions from neighbors. "We felt it wouldn't be proper to provide anything less (than one foot-candle) because it could open up potential liability issues to the town," Raymond said.

The lighting design incorporates 12 different circuits so the school can limit lighting to only the areas that need it on a given night. The design is "well above and beyond what other schools have done," Spofford said.

Spofford stressed to neighbors that there was a difference between illuminated ground, which is what was measured in a foot-candle, and illuminated air. He said neighbors, to a certain extent, would have to live with the fact that the school grounds would be much more illuminated than before renovation, when the site was hardly lit at all.

Raymond said that since most of the lighting has not yet been installed, more time would be needed for school officials to "customize a minimum lighting scheme."

Of the lighting that has been installed, however, not all has been done according to plans. Two lampposts near the new entrance to the school were placed closer to each other than originally designed. That prompted neighbors to wonder whether the one foot-candle standard was being exceeded in that area, which is close to homes on Pond Street.

Spofford directed Raymond to conduct more field tests in that area to determine if in fact the standard was exceeded. Possible solutions would include unscrewing some bulbs or using bulbs with less wattage. Raymond added that the new lights were designed to dim about 50 percent over time.

Spofford said the School Building Committee was aware of neighbors' concerns about lighting when they approved the current design. But, he said, using more lamps with bulbs of lesser wattage was prevented by a limited budget.

The School Committee deferred any further debate about the new lighting to the School Building Committee, and Spofford told neighbors he would inform them when the issue was on the agenda for future meetings.

The School Committee will seek a solution, however, to concerns surrounding another lighting issue on the school's athletic fields. The matter was raised by Henry Rattenbury of Briarwood Lane, whose son has measured lighting at three foot-candles outside his father's house. School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn said he would contact people who had worked on the field lighting to see if lights could be angled down onto the field so that less light would escape into the adjacent neighborhood.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Hazardous Waste Day

Hazardous Waste Day will be held May 31 in Hull, Selectman Merle Brown announced Tuesday. The event will be held from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the intersection of Washington Street and Rockland Street.

Brown said May 31 is usually Paint Day at Cohasset's RTF station. This year, however, Brown said to bring oil-based paints to the event in Hull. Latex paint, he said, is not hazardous and can be thrown in with normal trash provided it is mixed with a substance like kitty litter to make it solid.

Bosworth graces cover of Teen Vogue

Cohasset native Kate Bosworth will grace the cover of the June/ July issue of Teen Vogue magazine.

Bosworth, 20, has acted in "The Horse Whisperer" with Robert Redford and "Remember the Titans" with Denzel Washington. Most recently, she was the star surfer-girl in the movie "Blue Crush." The new issue of Teen Vogue hits newsstands May 13.

Vacancy on Town History Committee

With the resignation of David Wadsworth, a vacancy has been created on the Town History Committee, effective July 1. Selectmen are accepting applications to fill the position. Wadsworth will keep his position as Town Archivist.

LACROSSE BANNER MISSING

The Cohasset Lacrosse Banner — a very large navy and white banner, both sides printed, lasted for less than a week at Milliken Field before it was stolen from the fence. Perhaps someone has seen it in a bedroom or closet? It is large. It is not a keepsake. The team would like it returned ASAP and ask that whoever has it return it to the field. They just want it back and hope that anyone who sees it would stop and think for a moment; about the time and effort people make to create pride and loyalty; coach and encourage sportsmanship for Cohasset Lacrosse — and then drop it off at Milliken or the school field.

Pin to help in battle against breast cancer

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's no surprise that Mark Cirone of Cohasset Jewelers — a second-generation family business — has an eye for beautiful jewelry.

So when a friend stopped by the shop in Tedeschi Plaza a couple of months ago, Cirone noticed she was wearing a pretty breast cancer pin. After further investigation, he discovered the 10-year-old piece of costume jewelry is no longer being made and the friend agreed to let him use the pin as a model.

"It was the most beautiful and striking breast cancer ribbon I had ever seen," he said.

Inspired by Cirone's wife's courageous battle with the disease, Cohasset Jewelers has duplicated the breast cancer pin in 14-carat gold and pink cubic zirconia and is selling it for $250 with all the proceeds (about $100 per pin after design and manufacturing costs, which the shop is donating) going directly to the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation.

"In addition to increasing breast cancer awareness," Cirone said, "Cohasset Jewelers hopes to donate a sizable gift to the Komen foundation to help find the cure, hopefully within my wife's lifetime."

The Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation is the nation's largest private funding source for breast cancer research and community outreach programs.

Sharon Cirone, 43, was diagnosed with an early stage of breast cancer eight years ago, at which time she was given a 90 percent chance of long-term survival. After a seizure 18 months ago, it was discovered the disease had metastasized and spread to her brain and lung — a diagnosis that shocked the Cirone family.

Mark Cirone's first intention was to wear the pin and bring awareness to breast cancer. After showing it to a few clients the day it was finished, the response was overwhelming, he said.

"I then thought that I could sell them to raise awareness and donate the proceeds to fight this horrible disease."

At first Cirone hoped to sell 100 pins by October, which is Breast Cancer Awareness Month, but the shop has already sold 50.

"I think it's possible to sell 1,000 ribbons and donate $100,000 to the Komen Foundation, raise awareness of this menacing disease and maybe light another fire within someone to fight this cause," he says. "The time has long past that we should accept the loss of 40,000 American women yearly to this disease." In fact this year alone, upwards of 212,000 American women will be diagnosed with breast cancer.

Cirone, who has seen his wife undergo whole brain and gamma knife radiation, and recent neurosurgery, all the while taking a plethora of drugs, is grateful to be able to do something that might make a difference.

"My belief is that with the collaboration and work of many, we may find a cure in Sharon's lifetime," he said.

Anyone interested in purchasing a pin, should stop by Cohasset Jewelers. Please allow two weeks for delivery.

Proceeds from sales of beautiful breast cancer awareness pins will benefit the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation.

Thoughts on Mother's Day

You may have tangible wealth untold
Caskets of jewels and coffers of gold.
Richer than I, you can never be-
I had a mother who read to me.
- Strickland Gillilan (1869-1954)

Mother's Day, in its current incarnation, is a uniquely American holiday traditionally celebrated on the second Sunday in May. Today we honor our mothers by taking them out to Sunday brunch, buying them flowers and candy or by saying how much they mean to us with a simple phone call or card. Woe to the child who ignores Mother's Day! Husbands dare not forget the day, too.

Poets have offered their thoughts about motherhood and Mother's Day. Gillilan tells of how such an ordinary thing as reading to a child can make a huge difference in that person's life. It is a moment of intimacy that is remembered forever. The memory is treasured like gold.

The poet Joaquin Miller (1839-1913) describes motherhood as a noble, but challenging, role. "The bravest battle that was ever fought! Shall I tell you where and when? On the maps of the world you will find it not; 'Twas fought by the mothers of men." Mothers, according to Miller, "bravely and silently" bear their part. "Lo, there is the battlefield!"

The celebration of Mother's Day in this country goes back to its first observance in Philadelphia on May 10, 1908. The holiday was officially recognized by Congress and the President in 1914.

Years before, the idea of honoring the nation's mothers with a special day was widely talked about. The tradition actually goes back to England, which had a long-standing practice of setting aside a special day for mothers. Originally, it was known as Mothering Sunday, and was celebrated in mid-Lent. Other European countries also have traditions of honoring motherhood.

Julia Ward Howe, (1819-1910), goes down in history as, well, the mother of Mother's Day. Howe, noted writer, lecturer, abolitionist and social reformer, is perhaps best known for writing the lyrics to "The Battle Hymn of the Republic."

After the Civil War, Howe took up the cause of the women's movement, campaigning extensively from her Boston home on behalf of women's rights. In 1872, hoping to draw attention to the oft-overlooked contributions of women, Howe first introduced the idea of celebrating Mother's Day in this country. It was her idea to call the holiday a peace day, and to celebrate it in early June. Howe was known to celebrate Mother's Day at an annual women's rights meeting in Boston.

Anna M. Jarvis (1864- 1948) took up the cause first advanced by Howe, advocating an official Mother's Day — this at a time when women were still denied the right to vote. In 1907, Jarvis began a campaign for the nation to observe the holiday with an official day, preferably the second Sunday in May. Jarvis introduced the custom of wearing a carnation on Mother's Day. A colored carnation symbolizes the person's mother is living, a white one that one's mother has died. The first official Mother's Day was celebrated in churches in Grafton, Penn. where Jarvis lived, and in Philadelphia.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Vigils continue

TO THE EDITOR:

Many have asked us, the members of the South Shore Peace Forum, why we continue to hold our vigil in front of the Post Office every Tuesday and Saturday After all, major hostilities have concluded. What do we hope to accomplish now?

The outcome of this war was certainly never in doubt. We are relieved that the major conflict was as brief as it was, and we mourn for those who were injured and those who lost their lives. We continue to support our troops and wish for them a quick and safe return from the dangers that remain. And it is about those dangers we wish to speak.

Many have observed that though the U.S. has won the war, our government has yet to win the peace. This task is much more difficult and protracted than the overt hostilities, and fraught with danger for our troops and for the people of Iraq. In that sense, this war is far from over, although the American people's attention for it may be.

We find ourselves engaged for the long run in a tense situation where hostility to our military's presence has already begun to flare, although even the outlines of a plan for self-government have not yet emerged.

This outcome too we fully expected. That is why we opposed the war. Our nation's policy of aggressive, violent pursuit of its ends has left our troops holding the bag in a chaotic situation for which they were never trained, and from which there are few peaceful or hopeful exit strategies.

And even if a plausible new government does emerge, against the odds, from the ashes in Iraq, the damage is done in the counties of the region. The citizens of those counties view ours as a rogue nation, pursuing a violent policy of invasion and destruction. And a few, a very few, are sure to conclude from this adventure that the only possible answer to this violence is more violence. It will only be a few, but as we learned to our horror on Sept. 11, it only takes a few.

The winners of this war are the radicals on both sides: those in this country who think that the U.S. can bully other nations with impunity, and those in the Arab world who claim that the American people will listen only to violence. The losers are the voices of moderation, the peacemakers, and the bridge-builders.

So we also consider ourselves to be engaged for the long run. We continue our vigil, as we have for over a year, to witness for peace. We believe the Bush policy is not in our national interest, and we will continue to say so. We oppose preemptive strikes, and the threat of them, as a matter of foreign policy. We call for a new foreign policy based on cooperation with other nations, with the U.N., with the E.U., with the World Court and with individual peacemakers and bridge-builders of all nations.

Lacrosse fundraiser support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

Thanks to everyone who supported the Lacrosse Boosters fundraiser! We recognize that many groups have needs and all of us are being asked to financially support more each year. We deeply appreciate the wonderful participation and contributions made by so many this past couple of weeks; our local very fine dining spots — Atlantica and Mike's Deli who contributed to the coupon roster; those of you who bought the tickets from the kids; the parent volunteers and the players themselves who recognized the need to support a JV program. Special thanks to Lyn Previte & her team, who coordinated the event. It was a very successful event and did raise the necessary funds to support the two new school teams — Junior Varsity Boys and Girls Lacrosse.

Our efforts will continue to be focused on making sure we provide the opportunity for kids to have fun, get to play and that student athletes in Cohasset will be able to continue to actively participate in school sports. With the growth in the sport we now have nine boys' and girls' teams in the Youth Lacrosse Program, who will go on to play for their Middle School, JV and Varsity teams. Thanks again! Make sure to use your 'tickets/coupons'. Check out our web site for game schedules and pictures and come up and catch a game:

Chamber train stance off mark

TO THE EDITOR:

The new Greenbush advocacy group (GOT) as well as the South Shore Chamber of Commerce is, in reality, endorsing potential catastrophic damage to the future economic resources of the South Shore. The nationally unique, multi-faceted Hingham historical, architectural, educational, archaeological, economic and scenic resource has the potential to bring hundreds of millions of tourist dollars to the South Shore yet both of these organizations turn a deaf ear.

Something is very wrong when supposedly pro-business organizations do their best to destroy the outstanding base resources that are base un-renewable resources of the South Shore economy. The South Shore Chamber of Commerce should be investigated to find out what is behind their irrational stand that leads them to twist the arms of government and to mislead the citizens of the South Shore.

LIBRARY CORNER

Book discussion for young adults

Attention all students between the ages of 13 and 16. The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is forming a book discussion, recommendation and advisory group for young adults. Mrs. Moody will facilitate and coordinate the meetings. The first planning session will be a pizza get-together Tuesday, May 13, from 7 to 8:30 p.m. in the Young Adult Room of the library. To register, call Moody at 781-383-1348. Space is limited.

Video Donations

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is looking for video donations from the community to enhance their growing collection. Tasteful adult and children's videos are now being accepted by the staff at the front desk.

If your are spring cleaning or just getting prepared for a summer garage sale, think of the library as a place to drop off any videos that you may no longer want.

Volunteer at the senior center

The Community Volunteer Program focuses on helping elders remain independent and remain in their homes. The volunteers of all ages help the Cohasset Elder Affairs with a variety of tasks from friendly visiting, telephone reassurance, van escort service and luncheon hostess. The program is designed to match the volunteer to the task and bring pleasure and companionship to both parties. Volunteer help is always, gratefully needed.

The volunteers have the ability to meet with, report to, and talk with the Outreach Coordinator, both on a regularly-scheduled basis and at times of the volunteer's choosing. Also the volunteer is accorded equal status and involvement in agency operations.

Call the Council on Elder Affairs at 781-383-9112 for more information.

Van drivers needed

Summer time volunteer drivers needed to provide transportation for Cohasset Elders. Typical trip is three to four hours once each month For errands, shopping, and to the Senior Center for lunch.

Interested drivers please call Cohasset Elders Affairs 781-383-9112

Happy Mother's Day!

Lauren Cook with her second grade class at the Osgood School.

The following essays were written by Lauren Cook's second grade students at the Joseph Osgood School, in honor of their mothers.

My mom is very pretty. She has brownish black hair and brown eyes. My mom has a kind heart. She works at Talbots. She helps me with my math and when I am sad. I like to go out to eat with her. My mom makes me feel loved when she calls me "Ev-Man." I love my mom!

— Evan Ackley

My mom has pretty black hair and eyes. My mom is pretty. My mom works at home and at the doctor's office in Hingham. When I am sick she makes me hot chocolate so that I feel better. My mom makes me feel loved when she plays with me. I love my mom.

— Sam Asnault

My mom has straight black hair and beautiful brown eyes. My mom has a beautiful heart. She is kind and loving and is very nice to everyone. She has smooth skin. My mom works at Gymborie and at home. At home she mostly feeds the family, cleans the house, and cleans our clothes. Mom helps me with my homework and helps me with my problems. She helps me when I am sick and when I hurt myself. She also helps when I am frustrated and when I'm sad. I like it when she takes me to French Memories. I like it when we do projects and take walks. I like to cuddle with her in bed and go to the mall with her. I like to cook with her and go on vacation with her. My mom makes me feel loved when she talks to me, when she cuddles with me, when she helps me with my problems, and when she gardens with me. I love my mom!

— Olivia Barnum

My mom has golden brown hair and blue eyes. She is tall and she looks pretty. She is a stay at home mom. She takes care of our five bunnies. Two bunnies are grown-ups and three are babies. She takes care of me and she bakes apple pies for me to eat when I get off the bus. She helps me with my homework, my reading and my science. She bakes cakes and muffins and we go on vacation. I like to play with her and our bunnies. My mom makes me feel loved when she calls me Angel, kisses me good night, and says she loves me. She is truly my own mom!

— Charlotte Barszewski

My mom has long brown hair and blue eyes. She likes kittens, dogs, and chocolate chip cookies. She works at home and takes care of my sister and me. She fixes play station. I like to play Play Station with her. My mom makes me feel loved when she buys me video games and when she hugs me. I love my mom!

— Jesse Batts

My mom has blond hair. She has blue eyes and she is good at sewing. She is very pretty. She does work at home and takes care of my siblings and me. She cleans our rooms, cleans our clothes, makes dinner, and plays games with us. She helps us with homework and if we are having a bad day or if we are sick she helps us. She helps us with stuff that we never did before. We like to read to her. I like to draw with her. She makes me feel loved by telling me that she loves me and when she says, "I'm proud of you." When I go to bed she kisses me and says prayers with me. I will never let my mommy go. I love my mommy.

— Sarah Brown

My mom has blond hair and she is pretty. My mom is nice and she is funny. My mom works outside. She mows the lawn when it is long and in the summer she plants the flowers. My mom helps me by helping me with my homework and she helps me with math. I like to go to the mall with her and out to breakfast with her. She makes me feel loved by giving me kisses and hugs. I love my mom!

— Christian Davis

My mom has brown hair and brown eyes. My mom's hair goes down to her shoulders. My mom works at our house. She helps us clean our messes up. She takes care of me when I am sick. She helps me do my homework. She goes to the mall with me. She goes on bike rides with me. She cooks with me and makes me feel loved when she hugs me. I like it when she goes somewhere alone with me and when she drives me to school. When I am bored she lets me have someone over. I love my mom!

— Nicole Farren

My mom has long black hair and brown eyes and she is pretty. She is very very smart and helpful to my class and me. My mom stays home to do book work for my dad and to take care of my kittens and me. My mom helps me do my homework, cooks dinner, does Girl Scouts and lets me have friends over. I love to go shopping with her and go for walks. Every school night my mom gets in my bed and reads to me. She says, "I love you" all the time and that makes me feel loved. I love my mom!

— Kendall Fiori

My mom has brown hair and brown eyes. She is kind hearted. My mom stays home to take care of her three children. She makes dinner for us and for my dad. She does all the gardening work. She helps me with my homework. My mom helps me with my reading. I like to shop with my mom. I like to draw with my mom. She makes me feel loved when she hugs me. I love my mom!

— Emily Guglielmo

My mom has blond hair and wears sneakers all the time. My mom works at CVS in Cohasset. Sometimes she picks me up at school and we play games together. My mom is kind and likes to laugh. I love my mom!

— Matt Harte

My mom has blond hair and blue eyes. She is smart and kind. My mom is a lawyer in Boston. My mom helps me with reading and homework. My mom plays baseball with me and watches sports with me on TV. My mom makes me feel loved when calls me her "rainbow" and hugs me a lot. I love my mom!

— Thomas Hislop

My mom has light blue eyes. My mom has a very kind heart. She is funny. My mom works around the house. She has to take care of my sisters, my dad, my dog, herself, and me. She helps me when I'm sick. She helps me with my homework. I like to sew with her. I like to cook with her. She makes me feel loved when we snuggle. She makes me feel loved when she hugs me good night. I love my mom!

Coaches step over the line

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I think if I were the coach of a college team and somebody asked me what I did for a living I'd tell them I robbed banks or at the very least I was a used car salesman.

After what has been happening to college basketball and football coaches for the past few weeks both of those jobs would be a step up, although they might not pay as much.

Only last week, the football coach-designate of Alabama, Mike Price, was fired before he could coach his first game over his conduct at a pro-am golf tournament in Florida, which included a visit to a topless bar.

The 57-year-old Price spent a couple of hundred dollars at the topless bar and then entertained an exotic dancer who charged $1,000 in room service to the soon-to-be-former Coach Price's hotel bill.

Well, what do you expect a college coach to do if he's about to sign a seven-year, $10 million contract at a school where a former coach, Bear Bryant, now deceased, still gets write-in votes for governor?

"I have apologized to my wife, the team and my coaches; I will learn from this," promised Price. I sure hope that topless bar and that exotic dancer were worth it.

Like I say, I sure hope the party and the coed were worth it.

Iowa State hasn't yet gotten around to firing basketball coach Larry Eustachy, who is the highest paid state employee with a million dollar-a-year contract that runs through the 2010-11 season.

The governor of Iowa gets $107,482 a year.

Seems the 38-year-old Eustachy happened to attend a post-game party at the University of Missouri and a bevy of nubile coeds happened to attend the party too and there are hormones and . . . you know . . .

Unluckily for the coach, a man with a camera happened to attend the party, too, and he happened to have a friend at the Des Moines Register which happened to have a open spot on the sports page.

"I'm an alcoholic," said Eustachy quickly as he viewed a picture of himself clutching as glass of booze in one hand and a squirming coed in the other. "I was obviously out of control.

"I'm at my best as you look at me right now. I am a far more effective husband, a far more effective coach . . . I think, long term, everything will be better."

Like I say, I sure hope the party and the coed were worth it.

While this was going on, St. Bonaventure University in upstate New York was seeking a basketball coach to replace Jan van Breda Kolff, whose firing caused the team to boycott the last two games of the season.

The coach was ousted for playing an ineligible player, Jamil Terrell, a graduate of Coastal Georgia Community College, who did not have an associate's degree but a certificate in welding from the school.

"This is a case of severe incompetence in the St. Bonaventure administration," said Van Breda Kolff. "Seven layers of university administrators knew of this issue, but chose not to inform me."

And then there's the coaches . . . oops; former coaches . . . at Georgia and Fresno State . . .

Lightkeepers to host Memorial Day cookout

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation is pleased to invite everyone for hamburgers, hot dogs, soft drinks or coffee immediately following the Memorial Day Parade on May 26, at Bancroft Hall on Government Island.

The non-profit Lightkeepers Corporation was established in 1991 to renovate a former two-family lightkeepers' residence, no longer used as such because of automation of Minot's Light, and convert it into a function room for community use. The building is leased from the town but maintained and operated by the Lightkeepers Corporation. The generosity of Cohasset residents and others provided the funds for renovation. Operating and maintenance expenses, and reserves for capital replacements or improvements, are recovered from rental of two apartments on the second floor, and from fees charged to non-residents for use of the function room facilities. Cohasset residents may use the facilities for a nominal fee, and non-profit organizations at no charge.

This will be the seventh year (2003) that CLC has hosted Memorial Day attendees in recognition of the generosity of our supporters and we expect to serve over 1200 people again.

Budget bottom line isn't going to get any bigger

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

If you totaled up the budget reversals demanded by the thousands of people who marched on Beacon Hill last week, they'd likely come to about — $3 billion.

Well, $1.5 billion anyway — about the amount you come up with after you factor out new revenues and inflation and entitlement spending in the budgets that were debated, loudly, inside and outside the Statehouse.

Inside, the conversation was about the revenue side of the ledger, and it was clear the bottom line of that side isn't going to get any larger. A large majority of representatives agreed that this is not the time to borrow or tax on the way to a balanced budget. That leaves cuts.

And that's the problem, the protesters said. They correctly pointed out that refusing to hike revenues (beyond the gigantic fee increases in the budgets of the governor and House) causes real people to suffer. It's a scenario in which no one's wrong and no one's happy — taxes were already raised, by $1.2 billion, last year, and the majority of the people doesn't want taxes raised even more. On the other hand, it's all but certain that crime will rise and kids will drop out of school if budgets now in play go through.

An odd sidelight to much of the protesting was the way Romney took a beating though the House budget is less generous than his. College students who came to the Hill chanted anti-Romney invective, for instance — but the House budget cuts higher ed more, and more arbitrarily than the governor. The human services people displayed the same focus, targeting Romney more than the Democrats even though when the governor's budget came out, it impressed advocates with its compassion. The focus on the governor rather than the House is driven by party, naturally, but in this case both parties are anti-tax. A big difference for many is that Romney the candidate promised repeatedly not to cut core services.

That's far from saying they agree. In fact, according to Finneran, Romney proposes to "do serious harm to the residents of the Commonwealth" with parts of his budget. He attacked the governor with a fervor not seen since the Dukakis years, accusing him of running a "permanent political campaign" instead of governing. In the court of public opinion, Finneran has nothing to lose — his seat and his speakership are safe and his negatives are stuck so low he's free to say what he wants.

In the face of criticism from both branches, the governor held off on filing his reorganization plan. He's now free to say he wanted to try reform first, before deep cuts, but the Legislature didn't want to innovate. Democrats will counter they did adopt the reforms that made sense, and rejected foolish ideas. One tack the Speaker and other Democrats might want to drop is criticizing Romney for using PowerPoint presentations, simple or otherwise. Romney could communicate a lot by letting the Democrats know that since about 1991, PowerPoint has been standard equipment for managers who know what they're doing.

The week's budget stories were interrupted by a front-pager the Statehouse community had been awaiting for months: a finding in the judicial-misconduct case of Maria Lopez.

• Hearing officer determines Lopez lied under oath; suggests apology — Judge Maria Lopez attempted to defame the victim in the "Ebony" Horton child-molestation case, conducted herself improperly in her contacts with Horton's defense team, and lied under oath during the investigation of her conduct, hearing officer E. George Daher found in a ruling issued Tuesday. But she should not be removed from the bench if she apologizes, Daher said – instead, a six-month suspension and a fine would be just. But Lopez was not contrite in her statements to the press, and the matter still faces several administrative rounds before the Supreme Judicial Court metes out her ultimate sanction.

• House rejects taxes, borrowing — A week after rejecting slot machines and casinos, the House overwhelmingly rejected new or higher taxes and borrowing as solutions to the state's budget gap. Rank and filers joined Republicans and members of Finneran's leadership team in turning back efforts to raise the income tax, extend the sales tax to alcohol, borrow $300 million and require broader disclosure of corporate tax levels. The only significant tax policy adopted as budget debate began was a five-year extension of a tax credit that rewards investors.

• Perspectives on gay marriage vary according to orientation — The latest round in the battle over gay marriage opened with a repeat of the two sides' points of view at a hearing of the Judiciary Committee. Gay and lesbian activists said the amendment would thwart the formation of loving families, while social conservatives argued the traditional heterosexual family structure is so important to society it deserves constitutional protection. The earliest that the proposal could hit the statewide ballot would be in November 2006, and that appears a remote possibility.

• New numbers show 86 percent of vocational school students pass MCAS: Eighty-six percent of vocational school students in the class of 2003 have passed the exam, a requirement for graduation with a diploma. Lt. Gov. Healey announced the numbers in Tyngsboro, calling it an "extraordinary achievement."

• Driscoll: board should consider raising MCAS pass level — Buoyed by this year's MCAS successes, Education Commissioner David Driscoll said the time is at hand to consider raising the passing grade. That will keep up the pressure for schools to improve and students to perform, he said at a Board of Education meeting.

• Thousands get redundant bills for taxes due — About 4,500 people mistakenly received tax bills from the Department of Revenue over the past few weeks, causing some chaos in the peak after-tax season. The citizens who used H&R Block or Drake Software systems to file their returns and checked "no" when asked if they wanted taxes taken out of their bank accounts were sent notices of delinquency even if they sent DOR a check. Officials there promised a quick correction.

• Official says SARS unlikely to devastate Bay State — It's creepy and scary, but Severe Acute Repertory Syndrome is unlikely to become a serious problem in Massachusetts if people keep their heads and take the same precautions they do to avoid the common cold, Alfred DeMaria, assistant commissioner for the state Bureau of Communicable Disease Control, told the Public Health Council. Health officials reported two new suspected cases. Nineteen cases – 17 suspected and two probable – have been reported by the state.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on five roll calls and local senators' votes on three roll calls from the week of April 28-May 2. All House roll calls are on amendments to the proposed $22.497 billion fiscal 2004 state budget.

BORROW $300 MILLION (H 4000)

House 31-126, rejected an amendment allowing the state to borrow $300 million in order to restore some of the cuts in the state budget. Amendment supporters said this five-year "bridge loan" is a fiscally and socially responsible way to allow the state to restore some local aid cuts to cities and towns and services to some of the most vulnerable members of society including senior citizens, the poor and the disabled. They noted that low interest rates make this solution an attractive one that will cost the state only between $30 million and $40 million. Amendment opponents said this one-time, short-term fix is a fiscally irresponsible way to attempt to solve the fiscal crisis and is similar to a family using a credit card to pay the balance of the same credit card. They argued this would lead to more borrowing next year and hurt the state's precarious credit rating. (A "Yea" vote is for borrowing $300 million. A "Nay" vote is against the borrowing).

Y

HIKE INCOME TAX RATE FROM 5.3 PERCENT TO 5.95 PERCENT (H 4000)

House 37-119, rejected an amendment raising the state income tax rate from 5.3 percent to 5.95 percent. Amendment supporters said this reasonable increase would generate some $700 million in revenue that can be used to restore services to the sick, elderly and poor who will be severely hurt without this funding. They noted it can also restore some local aid cuts and prevent the layoffs of teachers, firefighters and police. Amendment opponents said the hike is misguided and argued the voters have made it clear that they do not want their taxes raised. They noted the hike will restore the nickname "Taxachusetts" and will hurt an already faltering economy. (A "Yea" vote is for the hike to 5.95 percent. A "Nay" vote is against the hike).

N

IMPOSE SALES TAX ON ALCOHOL SALES (H 4000)

House 24-131, rejected an amendment imposing the state's five percent sales tax on the purchase of alcohol beverages at liquor stores and other outlets. Amendment supporters said the sale of this luxury item should not be exempt from the sales tax and argued the estimated $60 million to $80 million in revenue could be used to restore devastating budget cuts in various health areas including alcohol abuse and other programs that are necessary because of excessive alcohol consumption. Amendment opponents said alcohol is already heavily taxed in the state and noted that over 50 percent of the cost of a six pack of beer currently goes to federal and state taxes. They argued this sales tax would hurt small family-owned businesses including ones on the New Hampshire border because liquor is less expensive in the Granite State. (A "Yea" vote is for the sales tax on alcohol. A "Nay" vote is against the tax).

N

EXTEND THREE PERCENT INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT (H 4000)

House 144-10, approved an amendment extending the three percent investment tax credit, scheduled to return to one percent on December 30, for another five years through 2009. Amendment supporters said this credit is good for the economy and creates jobs by helping to attract new companies to the state and encouraging existing ones to remain here by spurring investment in new buildings, manufacturing and research and development. They noted that this tax revenue loss would be offset by a growth in property, income and corporate excise taxes. Amendment opponents said the extension would cost $19 million that the state cannot afford and argued the savings could be used to restore many devastating budget cuts. They argued studies have shown this tax credit has no positive effect on employment and may in fact cause unemployment by encouraging automation. (A "Yea" vote is for extending the three percent investment tax credit for five years. A "Nay" vote is against the extension).

Y

RACETRACK MONEY TO GENERAL FUND (H 4000)

House 53-101, rejected an amendment providing that one-quarter of one percent of the amount of money wagered at greyhound racetracks go to the General Fund instead of the tracks' Capital Improvement Fund as required under current law. Amendment supporters said the state can no longer afford to offer preferential treatment to privately-owned racetracks by giving them this capital improvement money that should rightfully go to the state. They noted the estimated $2.5 million should be used by the state to reduce some of the devastating budget cuts. Amendment opponents said the $2.5 million will ensure quality and safe tracks and protect hundreds of jobs that would be lost if the tracks do not receive this money and are forced to close. (A "Yea" vote is for giving the money to the state. A "Nay" vote is against giving the money to the state).

Y

FISCAL 2004 TAX REVENUE FORECAST

Senate 36-0, approved resolutions forecasting that $13.9 billion in tax revenue will be available to help fund the fiscal 2004 state budget in the absence of any tax hikes or reductions. Supporters said it is important for the House, Senate and governor to agree on a projected amount of tax revenue which in conjunction with billions of dollars in federal reimbursements, fines, fees and other non-tax revenue sources, will fund this year's state budget. They said the figure was arrived at following extensive analysis and will ensure that any proposals for budget cuts and/or tax hikes are considered in a fair manner based on sound information and accurate forecasts. (A "Yea" vote is for the resolutions).

Y

PUBLIC EMPLOYEES IN MILITARY SERVICE (S 1985)

Senate 37-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill providing that state employees who are granted a military leave of absence for active military service after September 11, 2001, continue to receive their base salary reduced by their military salary. It also ensures that these employees do not lose any seniority or accrued vacation or leave time. The proposal, effective until October 1, 2003, also gives cities and towns the option to accept the law and apply it to municipal employees. Supporters said the bill would assist these brave citizens who are helping the nation in the war against terror and ensure that they and their families do not suffer financially while defending the freedom of the United States and the world. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

Y

LEADERSHIP JOBS AND SALARIES (H 3743)

Senate 29-9, gave near final approval to a House-approved bill allowing the House and Senate, through their operating rules, to unilaterally set the bonus pay above the $53,381 base salary, of their committee chairs and other majority and minority members in leadership positions. Under current law, any bonus pay proposal must be filed as a bill and then go through the regular legislative process and be sent to the governor who can sign it or veto it. Supporters said this would fairly allow the House and Senate to manage their own in-house affairs without interference from the governor and noted the governor has always been able to set the salaries of his staff without legislative interference. Opponents said the bill would destroy the system of checks and balances by effectively giving the powerful speaker and senate president the ability to quickly increase the pay of favored legislators without public scrutiny. They argued the measure is poorly timed in light of the state's budget crisis, layoffs of state and local employees and program cuts. Only a final okay by each branch is necessary prior to the bill going to Governor Romney. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill allowing the Legislature to unilaterally set bonus pay. A "Nay" vote is against the bill).

Silver anniversary!

Reservoir, treatment plant are turning 25

The treatment plant, finished that same year, increased the town's water pumping capacity from 800,000 to 3 million gallons per day.

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Cohasset's Aaron River Reservoir and Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant are turning 25 years old this year. The Water Commission is celebrating the anniversary on Sunday at 1 p.m. at the Aaron River Dam at the end of Beechwood Street.

Completed in July of 1978, the reservoir ensured that the town would have a supplemental source of water supply for years to come. The treatment plant, finished that same year, increased the town's water pumping capacity from 800,000 to 3 million gallons per day.

The reservoir project began in 1965 when the Water Commission hired a company called Sanitary Engineering Associates (SEA) to explore using the Aaron River as a water source. After SEA suggested damming the river, the Water Commission spent years planning the project and securing permits and funding.

To pay for both the reservoir and the sorely needed treatment plant, the commission secured a $994,000 federal grant from the Department of Federal Housing and Urban Development and a $1.5 million loan from the Farmers Home Administration.

When cost turned out to be higher than expected, the commissioners went back to from the Farmers Home Administration for another loan of $1 million. The remaining $206,000 to pay for the project was appropriated from Town funds.

In the end, the two projects totaled some $3.7 million. The reservoir took more than 10 years to plan, but construction took only two years, from 1976 to 1978.

Water Commission Chairman John McNabb, who organized Sunday's anniversary celebration, said even today the reservoir and the treatment plant were invaluable to the town.

"Building the reservoir and the (treatment) plant marked a new era for the town, because it put years of annual water bans behind us," he said. "And it gave us a water supply that, even now, 25 years later, is more than we need on a daily basis."

McNabb said all Water Commissioners who had served the Town since it formed its own Water Department in 1950 would be honored during the celebration at the Aaron River Dam on Sunday. Each former commissioner, or his family, will be presented with a plaque commemorating the 25th anniversary occasion.

Speaking at the ceremony will be Edwin Pratt, who served as Superintendent of the Water Department for 14 years, from 1967 to 1981. Pratt will also be presented a plaque, as he played an instrumental role in overseeing the project to its finish, McNabb said.

Colorful book on Gulf River available

"A lot of people, even living quite nearby, had no idea (the Gulf River) had this type of background," said Hartshorne, who is also a member of the Cohasset Historical Society. "I wanted to make them aware of that."

Hartshorne said he used the book "Narrative History of Cohasset" by E. Victor Bigelow as his major source, but he also gathered information from the Historical Societies of Scituate and Cohasset.

He said he was originally drawn to the river by both his love for nature and his love for rowing. "It just has always struck me as such a picturesque piece of water," he said.

But Hartshorne also said that fertilizer used on nearby lawns, faulty or out-of-date septic systems and storm-water runoff from impervious surfaces all posed a threat to the Gulf River.

"It just has always struck me as such a picturesque piece of water."
— John Hartshorne

This summer, students from Cohasset High School will test the water at different places in Gulf River for fecal coliform bacteria. By comparing their findings to old data, Hartshorne said the Gulf Association hopes to determine how it should move forward protecting the river.

Meanwhile, students from the University of Massachusetts recently completed a natural resource inventory of the Gulf River. Their report outlines the soils, rock types, plant life, animal life and different habitats that the river is home to.

Members of the Gulf Association will take a closer look at the findings of the inventory at the association's next meeting on Tuesday, June 10 at the Lightkeeper's Residence on Government Island.

"(The inventory) is really just to nail down what we have in all aspects," said Hartshorne. "It doesn't tell us what to do. That's the next step."

The Gulf Association has about 60 members, split evenly between residents of Cohasset and Scituate, but Hartshorne said the association welcomes newcomers.

Signups for Drama Workshop

In celebration of its 15th anniversary, the Children's Drama Workshop (CDW) presents an original musical comedy called "Jack Beanstalk."

Rehearsals for "Jack Beanstalk" will be held Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday afternoons from 1 to 3 p.m. beginning Tuesday, June 24 at the brand new, (air-conditioned!) Deer Hill School Auditorium. This year, the program has been extended to seven weeks and performances are scheduled for Tuesday, Aug. 5 at 10 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. and Wednesday, Aug. 6 at 1 p.m. and 7:30 p.m..

Registration for "Jack Beanstalk" begins Monday, June 9 at 9 a.m. All children between the ages of 5 and 14 are welcome. Early registration is advisable as enrollment is strictly limited. The cost is $440 per child. Children enrolled in the Cohasset Playground Program receive a $30 discount. Checks can be made payable to "CDW." For further information, please contact the Cohasset Recreation Department at (781) 383-4109.

Original children's musical takes the stage this summer

izing ideas with her sister Grace, to the almost finished product of today, Beth says it took roughly seven weeks to get things right, but remains flexible should change become necessary. Her writing goes through many stages of editing and re-working before she will even consider producing it. In the time that has passed since the production of "Cinderella Smith", Beth believes her writing has become even better. When comparing the first with the second, she notes, "The dialogue is more honed. I can edit myself better. You have to be your own worst critic."

Even with all the preparation, "You never know until you take it to the stage," she said. Dialogue between characters on paper oftentimes needs to be modified when the actors begin to rehearse. When that happens, Beth turns to the woman who has directed all her shows since the beginning, her sister Grace. "Grace is the best person to go to," Beth said. "She can visualize the whole picture."

With the possibility of last-minute change comes a need for flexible actors, which Beth has found in the children she works with, most of which return year after year to participate. "I can't believe the changes I can give them last minute," she said. "They always live up to [the challenge], more than we expect them to."

Over the years the number of children participating has grown so steadily that the Deveneys estimate they could have as many as 80 children registering for this summer's show. Even with all those children, Beth is not at all surprised that they've never had any discipline problems. "We don't treat them as kids, we treat them as cast members," she said. "We stress that every part is really important.Everyone needs to feel like they've accomplished something, and they do."

Children participating in the show are encouraged to share their ideas, becoming not only actors, but a part of the production process. "They feel like it's their show because we listen to them," Beth said. "Every year it seems like they get more and more into it."

With the trust given to the children comes a responsibility for the show they will put on as well as a deep sense of pride and accomplishment from not only a wonderful play, but a great personal performance. "The kids come back from year to year and they've developed a new confidence and self-assurance from being on the stage," Grace said.

While some children are very shy at first, the sisters always see a boost in confidence by the end and the obvious pride in their team effort. Beth said the best part for her is when they hold their cast party and ask all the children what their favorite part about the program was. Many say it's the new friends they've made and how proud they feel to have been part of something so special. "The kids are just a joy to work with, they're the best part," Beth said. "That's what keeps us coming back."

Most of the writing Beth has done has been geared toward children, but ultimately her inspiration comes from personal experience. "Jack Beanstalk" is loosely based on a trip she and Grace took to Spain. While hiking a 500-mile trail called the El Camino de Santiago, they noticed yellow arrows to help guide tourists in the right direction. Using that life changing experience as a starting point, Beth chose to have Jack follow green arrows throughout his adventure. As much as the trip to Spain was a journey for Beth and Grace, it mirrors the experience Jack has as he travels along his path in the sky.

While Jack Beanstalk is a comedy, Beth points out that there is more to the story that its just being funny, there are lessons to be learned as well. "It's about the journey, not the end result," she said.

As for the future of the Children's Drama Workshop, Beth said it is uncertain as to what will happen. Sarah's role in the production has been much smaller that usual, with her preparation for another upcoming event – her wedding. Post nuptial plans include a move to California, which could make this her last summer of being involved with the show. As for Grace and Beth, they're waiting to see how "Jack Beanstalk" is received this summer and will then decide whether they would like to try to take the show to Boston. The two have also set the goal of starting their own production company in the fall. "I love writing plays and that is what I want my whole career to be," Beth said, and if her success in Cohasset is any indication, she should have no trouble doing just that.

CHS boys cap historic week with first defeat of Hingham in six years

Erasing six years of frustration, the Cohasset boys varsity lacrosse team climaxed perhaps its greatest week ever by beating two-time defending Division 2 state champion Hingham, 12-10, at Alumni Field on Tuesday night.

The Skippers trailed only for the first two minutes of the game, and led 9-4 at the half and 12-7 midway through the final period before Hingham's final desperate comeback effort fell short.

Cohasset also beat Falmouth, Marshfield and Nantucket to run its season record to 8-1, and 6-1 in Pilgrim League play. The Skippers only loss was in its opening game to nationally-ranked Duxbury, the defendign Div. 1 state champs.

"Beating Hingham was one of our goals for this season," said Cohasset coach Kevin Orcutt, "and I'm so proud for our seniors (Curt Kahn, Matt Davis, Nick Spirito, Tom Anderson, John Durkin, Robert Hickey, Ben Lynner and Evan Pestone) that they achieved it. But we're still taking this year a game at a time, because we've got other goals we're aiming at."

Cohasset, as was the case throughout the week, got balanced scoring from its offense and consistent pressure and stops from its defense. Soph Jake Previte climaxed a breakout week with three goals and an assist against the Harbormen, who focused their defensive efforts on senior attackmen Curt Kahn (one goal, three assists) and Matt Davis (two goals, two assists). Other Skipper scorers were seniors John Durkin (two goals), Robert Hickey and Tom Anderson (a goal apiece), junior Mike Rasmussen (a goal and an assist) and soph Joe Durkin (one goal, the first of his career).

After Hingham got on the board early, scoring less than a minute into the contest, the Skippers ran off five consecutive goals, with Kahn finding Previte open on the crease at the nine-minute mark, then underhanding a shot by Hingham goalie Nate Hammond less than a minute later. Previte picked up his second of the game on a feed from Rasmussen after another minute and a half, and Matt Davis scored his first on an isolation dodge from behind the goal two minutes later. Davis found classmate Tom Anderson alone in front for the fifth goal of the run

Late rally lifts Norwell nine over Cohasset

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset and Norwell High baseball teams have a good deal in common.

Both the Clippers and Skippers have new coaches. They're both in the South Shore League. They're both coming off down years that saw them finish well off the pace to qualify for the state tourney, but they both appear ready to make legitimate runs at that golden ring this spring.

Last Thursday, the two SSL rivals met for the first of two meetings on the season in a "meaningful game," and, from the level of play, it was clear all involved knew this.

The host Norwell boys won the game, coming from behind to score five runs in their final at bat to take the 6-4 decision— improving to 4-5 on the season, one win below the magic .500 mark needed for postseason qualification. Cohasset fell to 4-4 with the loss.

"The kids were extremely excited to get that win, but I don't know if they can truly appreciate how big a win for us this really is," said second year Norwell coach Tom Jacobs. "If we had lost this one, I'd say our postseason hopes would've taken a pretty good hit. It would have been the fourth loss in a week

Cohasset tennis teams dominate Mashpee

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Lady Skippers have set a very high bar for tennis excellence in Cohasset. Both teams, last Monday, playing league opponent Mashpee, were up for the challenge, recording wins of 5-0 each.

For the girls, it was just yet another shutout, this one requiring the aid of only one member of the starting lineup. For the boys, the regular roster of seven teamed for their second shutout of the year, running their record to 4-2.

It was clearly the most dominating effort of the year for the males, even more so than the last time Cohasset went to the Cape to shut out Cape Cod Academy, 5-0. Cohasset did not relinquish so much as a set, and the handful of games that were lost by Skippers players were done in the name of gentlemanly sportsmanship.

Mashpee, after three consecutive trips past the first round of the playoffs, has been hit disastrously by graduation, leaving four of their top five spots to be filled by a first year senior and a key core of three seventh graders. While this trio may be the future of the South Shore League, every one of the five contests was grossly lopsided.

D. Ingber started off with a win over senior hockey standout John Barbery, 6-0, 6-0, while freshman Nils Sceery took the same score at second singles. Sceery, who had been playing second doubles in his first year with the varsity team, may be at the singles position to stay. The line-up shift enables the team to place Tim Anton, formerly second singles, at first doubles, a move which strengthens the team as a whole.

At third singles, the 6'3" senior Ross Lieb-Lappen, towering a good foot and a half above his seventh grade opponent, won 6-1, 6-1, sportingly allowing the unfortunate middle schooler a chance at competition.

At first doubles, Anton teamed up with fellow junior Andrew Wise for a relatively unchallenged decision in two sets, while senior Scott Faber won with the same degree of ease with freshman partner, Chris Pescatore.

At home and as expected, the boys team lost on Tuesday to sports-power school Catholic Memorial— a team with the ability, despite its lack of depth, to defeat the likes of BC High, as they did last week.

On the rainy and slippery afternoon, CM won three matches (second singles, third singles and first doubles) before the remaining matches were called off in the middle to avoid unnecessary injuries.

Now at 4-3, the team needs four more wins for a playoff berth, hoping for second go-around victories over Cape Cod Academy, Mashpee, Abington, and Carver. Anything else would lead to a higher seed, and possibly a home match, something that has not happened for quite some time on the men's side of the court.

Girls Tennis

Meanwhile, the girls simply continue to take care of business against much weaker and less experienced teams. The girls talent level is such that they could throw in a line-up, as they did on Monday, that featured five freshmen and a sophomore.

Lady Skippers double pleasure

Cohasset softball team takes back-to-back wins over Norwell

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

It must have felt to the members of the Norwell and Cohasset High softball teams like discovering a small oasis in the middle of the desert—getting a chance to play against one another in a couple of "competitive" games.

No one expected a whole lot from the building Lady Skippers and rebuilding Lady Clippers this spring, and, for the most part, there hasn't been a whole lot to report, at least in terms of wins. But when the two struggling teams met for back-to-back games last week, there was a chance for the girls on both teams to show a little more, to play with a little confidence.

The Cohasset girls won both games by three runs, but, win or lose, both teams got to take a little self esteem from the meetings.

"I didn't have much of a voice left after those games," said second year NHS coach Jack Browne, whose team fell to 0-8 with the losses on Thursday and

YOUTH LACROSSE REPORT

Cohasset Blue 11-U boys split games

The Cohasset Blue 11-U team (grades 3 and 4) traveled to Marshfield on May 4 and came out on the short end of a 12-9 score. Derek Youngman scored twice in the first period, once assisted by John McGoldrick, as the first quarter ended in a 2-2 tie. Youngman added a goal and an assist in the second period, with Andrew Whitney and Brendan Horigan notching goals as the half closed at 6-5 in favor of Marshfield.

Marshfield opened its lead in the third period. Alex Evans converted a Horigan pass for Cohasset's only score in the period. Finally, Cohasset's fourth-period comeback fell short. Chris Murphy scored once and Chase Murphy twice — the second assisted by Youngman — to bring the final to 12-9.

Chase Murphy and Sam Leahy split the game in net, each recording a half dozen saves to keep the contest close as Cohasset struggled to overcome repeated penalties.

The Blue team — helped by a few pick-ups from the Gray and White teams — did pick up a mid-week win against Hull — the first time Cohasset has ever squared off against its neighbor because Hull's program is new. Cohasset's offense played well in the first half and dominated in the second half, while the defense played well, broke up most Hull offensive attempts and turned the ball back upfield to our middies.

Derek Youngman led the team with four goals and two assists, while Chris Murphy added two goals. Alex Kinnealey, Dan Czerkawski, Morgan Grasz, Kyle Livingston and Mark Dick added solo scores. Kinnealey, John Collins, Pat Dunn and Johnny McGoldrick notched assists. Robbie Mahoney and Eric Wasel lead the defensive effort in front of goalies Brendan Horigan (4 saves) and Chris Wilson (3 saves).

15-U Boys continue dominating ways

The Cohasset 15-U Blue team continued upped its record to 3-0 with a dominating 9-2 road win over a very big and overly aggressive Marshfield team.

Alex Shipp led the way with three goals showing great toughness and concentration as he was hit hard each time he scored in front of the cage. Shipp benefited from some great passes, two from Peter Oswald and a third from Jared Kinch to make for picture-perfect goals.

Oswald, Kinch, Ryan Kucinski, Peter Ernst, Corey Chase and Austen Lanzillotti all had single goals for Cohasset, which was outstanding on ground balls and face-offs all day long, thanks in large measure to the efforts of Adam Smith, Justin Connors and Sean Silvia.

For the third straight contest, the Cohasset defense was outstanding, allowing very few good scoring chances in front of goalie Wes Ulmer, who recorded 8 saves. Jake Cuneo, Kyle Pinkus, Bobby Meikleham and Jared Dick cleared the ball efficiently and consistently stripped Marshfield's offense.

The 15-U White squad did not play when a visiting Duxbury squad failed to arrive for its game in Cohasset.

Girls stay unbeaten

The Cohasset girls youth lacrosse program remained undefeated on the season, raising its composite record to 10-0-1 by sweeping games at home against Hanover and on the road ni Falmouth. Teams at both levels played shorthanded, yet outhustled their opponents to fairly easy wins.

12-and-Under Girls The Cohasset White 12-U team opened the day with a runaway win against Hanover in a game played at the Deer Hill School.

Gabriella Flibotte scored five goals — her lowest scoring output in the team's three games — and added one assist as Cohasset White controlled the game early, let Hanover back into it briefly, and then took control for good.

Isabelle Franklin scored twice, with Caitlin Mahoney, Lindsey Allard and Katie Gaumer each adding one goal and one assist. Amy Meikleham, Madeline Leahy and Caroline Saltonstall each added solo markers as the final score reached 13-4 for the home team. Amanda Masotta, Mimi Mahoney, Megan Richardson and Liz Tetrault led a tough defense in front of Thomson Jaffe, who stopped seven of the 11 shots Hanover put on net.

The Cohasset Blue team traveled to Falmouth later in the day, with several players doubling up and playing their second game of the day to fill in for missing comrades. Despite what should have been tired legs, Cohasset controlled the game from start to finish. Five different players scored as Cohasset jumped to a 5-2 halftime lead.

Isabelle Franklin and Katelyn Ryan each finished with two goals, while Lindsey Hill added a goal and an assist. Caroline Saltonstall, Maura Barnes, McKenna Teague and Amy Meikleham notched solo scores. Sarah Libby, Lauren Blaze and Paige Smith led the defensive effort in front of Thomson Jaffe, whose four saves were enough to preserve the 9-4 win.

14-and-Under Girls

Cohasset's 14-U girls teams have thin rosters to begin with, and played their May 4 games strapped to find enough players to make a go of it.

You would never have known that from the scoreboard.

The Cohasset White 14-U team opened the day with a 6-1 convincing win over Hanover. Gabriella Flibotte — "playing up" with the older girls — led the scoring on the day, with help from Mary Previte and several assists from Kaleigh Swain. Sara Brown was particularly effective in starting the transition game that stopped Hanover's offense and pushed the ball forward. Aisling Guinee stopped five of the six shots Hanover mustered on the day.

Cohasset Blue, meanwhile was in Falmouth, where the game was delayed so that several players fresh from the Hanover game could arrive. Falmouth had 22 players on its sideline, while Cohasset had just 13, including five players from its 12-and-Under team forced to "play up" to fill out the roster. Many of the younger girls were playing in their second or third game of the day; what's more, "playing up" involves playing with checking, while the 12-and-Under girls aren't normally able to check at all.

It should have made for a Falmouth rout, but that was hardly the result. Lindsey Durkin scored five goals, including several on brilliant individual dashes to the cage, while McKenna Teague added two goals and fed Kara Wilcox for the first of her two goals. Kristen Dooley, Emily Coggins and Katelyn Ryan scored single goals, as the entire Cohasset team played together — most never leaving the field — for a surprisingly easy 12-2 win. Aisling Guinee — whose toughest shot of the day may have been from a car door hitting her fingers — made five saves in the net to seal the win.

All four of the girls teams travel to Hingham for Mother's Day games.

Laxmen sink Harbormen

with still nearly three minutes left in the quarter.

After a Hingham score, John Durkin , a force all night at both ends of the field, made an 80-yard run and fired a bounce shot by Hammond to give the Skippers a four-goal cushion.

With the lead, Cohasset's defense— seniors Nick Spirito, Ben Lynner and Evan Pestone, and juniors Conor Buick, Steve Davis and goalie Nick Murphy— settled in, and shut down the explosive Hingham offense led by Ben Prime, Drew Sowryda and Greg Paul. Murphy had five saves in the first half, which ended with a 9-4 Cohasset lead.

But Hingham never quit, even after senior Robert Hickey collected a pass from Kahn, and fired a rocket into the upper corner with just over five minutes left, giving Cohasset a 12-7 lead.

Three goals in less than three minutes drew the Harbormen to 12-10, before Cohasset could win a faceoff and take enough time off the clock to secure the victory. Murphy finished with 15 saves, several from point-blank range.

"I'm proud of everyone tonight," said coach Orcutt, "but especially our senior defensemen and our goalie. When you're two-time state champs, you never concede, and Hingham proved why they're one of the most respected programs in Massachusetts lacrosse. We managed to withstand that pressure, and that's going to help us big-time when the state tournament begins."

Cohasset's only other win over Hingham was in 1997, when the Skippers split with the Harbormen, winning 6-5 at Hingham, but losing the return match at Alumni by the same score.

This week, Cohasset faces four more opponents, beginning with a rematch against Norwell today (May 8), then another rematch at Nantucket on Saturday afternoon, and two more games on Monday and Tuesday at non-league opponent Milton and at Pilgrim rival Hanover, respectively.

With the Hingham win, Cohasset officially qualifies for the state tournament, the earliest it has ever done that.

Boys lax notes

Cohasset 14, Nantucket 4

Dominating defense, outstanding goalkeeping and soph Jake Previte's career-high five goals keyed the Cohasset boys' varsity's seventh straight win, a 14-4 thumping of non-league rival Nantucket.

Previte's goals – four of which came in the first half – helped Cohasset to a 9-2 half time lead that the Skippers extended to 13-2 before clearing the bench in the fourth quarter.

"We've asked Jake to do a lot this year," said coach Orcutt, "to play both attack and midfield. He's young, and at times has felt confused by this, which is understandable. But he's getting more comfortable in the role, and had a real impact on the outcome of this game."

Nine different Skippers scored, including the first career goal for soph Sam Steele, and the first goal of the season for junior midfielder Dwayne Morris. Senior defenseman Ben Lynner picked up his first career point, and classmate Nick Spirito also had an assist.

"We haven't forgotten what happened a year ago," said coach Orcutt, "when we lost to them on the island by a goal in what had to be the most frustrating and annoying game that we played in 2002. Today, we took it to them, and had only two penalties. That's the kind of controlled aggression we need for the rest of the season."

Other Cohasset scorers included seniors Matt Davis (two goals, one assist), Tom Anderson (one goal, three assists), Curt Kahn, Robert Hickey and John Durkin (one goal each), and junior middie Mark Davis (a goal).

"Our midfield play has been outstanding all week," said Orcutt. "Tom (Anderson), Robert (Hickey), JD (John Durkin) and Nick (Spirito) at longstick are as strong a group as we've seen, and on faceoffs, clears and transition offense they've controlled most of each game."

Junior goalie Nick Murphy had 11 saves while allowing all four goals in three-and-a-half quarters, and soph Chris Simms picked up three saves in relief.

"One of the big stories this year," said Orcutt, "is our goalie play. Murphy is giving us exactly what we need to be successful – consistent stopping and great outlet passes on the clears. And Simms is becoming everything you want in a backup keeper. He can come in cold, make a big save, and get the ball where it needs to go."

Cohasset 9, Marshfield 5

Despite some second-half offensive inconsistency and the heroics of one of the state's best goalies, the Cohasset boys' varsity beat previously undefeated Pilgrim rival Marshfield convincingly on Friday to highlight the annual Spirit Night sponsored by the Cohasset Lacrosse Boosters.

The Skippers broke out early, scoring three quick goals against Marshfield stopper Todd Faiella, and expanded the lead to 6-2 at the half and 8-2 at the end of three.

"Todd's a great goalie, and you have to get to him early, before he establishes a rhythm," said coach Orcutt. "When Curt (Kahn) and Matt (Davis) scored on their first two shots, they gave our offense a shot in the arm. Marshfield actually defended us well at the attack, but we spread things around and moved the ball until we found open men. Eventually, we'd get a look that even Faiella had a problem with."

A defense led by seniors Ben Lynner, Evan Pestone and Nick Spirito effectively shut down Marshfield's high-powered duo of Shea Coakley and Pete Collins, while Skipper goalies Nick Murphy and Chris Simms were outstanding. Simms' lone save came in the second quarter when Murphy was sent off for holding, and Marshfield was hoping to shift the game's momentum. Instead, the Cohasset back-up stopped the shot, cleared and the Skippers picked up a short-handed goal. Murphy returned, and finished with 12 saves.

"We had a big day in the face-off circle," said Orcutt. "Robert Hickey, John Durkin and Nick Spirito, who's established himself as one of the best longstick midfielders in the state, are giving us a lot more possessions than our opponents are getting."

Cohasset got balanced scoring from Curt Kahn, Matt Davis, Tom Anderson, Mike Rasmussen, John Durkin and Jake Previte.

Cohasset 16, Falmouth 8

The boys' varsity took care of Pilgrim rival Falmouth 16-8 on Wednesday night, April 30, at Alumni.

The Skippers jumped to a 9-1 first half lead behind junior Mike Rasmussen's four goals and Nick Murphy's 11 saves.

"This was Raz's best game to date," said coach Orcutt. "He drove on the cage very well, and with Falmouth worrying about Curt (Kahn) and Matt (Davis), they weren't prepared to defend him. That's the kind of balance we have this season, and it's fun to watch."

An outstanding defensive effort by seniors Nick Spirito, Ben Lynner and Evan Pestone, and juniors Steve Davis and Conor Buick, was a key to victory.

"When we lost Mike Devine for what looks to be the season with a broken wrist," said Orcutt, "we needed our senior defensemen to step up. And they have. Ben Lynner and Evan Pestone are playing at a very high level, and giving us everything we hoped we'd have at the defensive end this year."

Besides Rasmussen, Cohasset scorers included Tom Anderson (four goals, one assist), Matt Davis (two goals, three assists), Curt Kahn (two goals, two assists), Robert Hickey (two goals), and Mark Davis (one goal – his first of the year).

and still dominate the match for a 5-0 win.

Senior captain Julie Shea took the win at first, while freshman Chelsea Grossman, undefeated in her first year, won at second. Sophomore Emma Grinnell took the W at third singles.

The doubles pairs were comprised of all freshmen, Cohasset sweeping both. First doubles was the pair of Corey Evans and Whitney Condon, while the second doubles victorious tandem was freshmen Devin Smith and Remy Lee.

Baseball team 'Clipped' and dropped us a few games under .500 with another tough week coming up.

"Plus, come from behind wins are always good for team morale. This was a character builder."

Feelings on the opposite bench following the game, though far from cheery, were hardly dreary.

"We did some good things today," said first year Cohasset coach Al Gallotta. "We had some good defensive plays, we hit the ball pretty well, and I thought Mike (Snowdale) did an excellent job pitching until he tired a little at the end. Considering that was Mike's first time starting (on the mound) this year, I thought what he gave us was extremely encouraging."

Snowdale, a senior captain who was number two in the Skippers starting rotation last year, was unable to throw much for the first three weeks of practice this spring and was thus set way back. The decision to start him on Thursday came less than 48 hours earlier when number one hurler, sophomore Ted Straughn, injured his pitching wrist while attempting to get back to first base in a game against SSL rival Harwich and was scratched.

Snowdale surrendered just one run on two hits and four walks through his first five innings of work, but the Clippers reached him for five runs on five hits and a walk in the bottom of the sixth to go from a three run deficit to a two run lead.

Senior Matt O'Donnell started the rally for the Clippers with a long double to right center.

"That was probably the biggest hit right there," assesses coach Jacobs. "We hadn't been hitting much up until that point, and that gave us an instant lift. There's a big difference between starting an inning with an out and starting it with a big, well-hit shot like that one."

Sophomore Rob Napolitano (2-for-3) followed with another double to right center, plating O'Donnell to make it a 4-2 game.

Napolitano reached third on a fielder's choice two batter later and then scored on a wild pitch.

Senior Matt Sherman kept it going with an opposite field single to left. After Snowdale recorded his sixth strikeout of the game for out number two, Norwell leadoff hitter Greg Thornton lashed a clutch single to center that brought home senior Sean Gilligan and Sherman for the tying and go ahead runs.

Thornton (2-for-4) then stole his second base of the game and scored on a slow bounder up the middle by Rob Weber that got through for the base hit.

Norwell junior Ian Davis, who'd come on in relief of starter Dave Liffers to get the last out in the sixth, then closed out the Skippers in the top half of the seventh, inducing two infield pop outs and a ground out around a walk to Mike Dooley.

The Skippers reached Liffers for three runs in the top of the sixth, a one out double by leadoff man Dooley being followed by an RBI single by Chris McKenna, and RBI triple to right center and an RBI single by Louis Blanco.

The biggest defensive play of the game came an out later when Trey Curry lined a single to center and Blanco tried to score from second. Thornton put a nice charge on the ball in centerfield, and threw a perfect one bounce throw into a heavy wind to catcher Matt Greenburg to cut down Blanco by a couple of steps.

"I had a momentary thought of holding (Blanco) at third, but then I thought we were getting to the bottom part of the order and it was better to take a shot," explained coach Gallotta, who'd coached baseball for 28 years at Archbishop Williams (and also served there as Athletic Director for 25 years) before coming to CHS this year. "(Thornton) just made a perfect throw. The pressure was on them to make the play, and, unfortunately for us, they did. That throw goes five feet either way, and we'd have had a four run game with just one out.

Instead, the lead was 4-1 with two outs.

Davis was brought on in relief of Liffers (5-2/3 innings, four runs, seven hits, no walks, nine strikeouts), who was pitching on just two days rest.

"I give Dave full credit," lauded coach Jacobs. "He went as long as he could, and gave us a very nice effort."

The second year NHS coach had similar praise for Davis, who delivered his third scoreless relief appearance in four days.

"I've been calling him 'Every Day Eddie,'" laughed Jacobs, referring to Minnesota Twins reliever Eddie Guadardo, who has led the Majors in appearances a few times in recent years. "They key with Ian is he throws strikes. He has a nice slider, a nice cut fastball and he has good command. He keeps his pitches down."

Baseball Notes

Something else the Skippers and Clippers have in common: they both lost to the South Shore League leading Harwich team in the game previous to this one. The Skippers lost 8-1 on Tuesday to the Rough Ryders, and mustered only four hits.

24 hours later, the Clippers proved no match at home to Harwich, going up against the SSL's top pitcher in Cody Crowell. Norwell managed just two hits against the fireballing lefty in the 4-0 loss, and saw 15 batters go down via the K.

Tom Gunning was solid in the mound for Norwell. He held the visitors off the board in four of his five innings, surrendering all four of the games runs in the fourth frame. Davis mopped up, pitching a scoreless sixth and seventh.

Lady Skippers double pleasure

Friday. "They were exciting games. The kids were in to them, and I got to do a lot more coaching. It was good."

The script was similar in both games. Cohasset jumped out to early leads, and Norwell battled back, but never quite closed the deal.

On Thursday, the host Lady Skippers built a 4-0 lead through four innings behind some solid pitching by senior captain Heather Peraino, but Norwell scored four times in top of the fifth to tie the game. Cohasset responded with three in bottom of that frame, though, to retake the lead for good, the big hit a two-run double by shortstop Danielle Pinkus.

Katie James came on in relief of Peraino to start the sixth, and her faster delivery seemed to put the Lady Clippers back on their heels a bit. The freshman hurler walked three and gave up a run in her first inning of work, but settled down to punch out three of the four batters she saw in the final inning, two by strikeout.

Catcher Casey Anderson came up with a couple of big defensive plays in the late stages. The junior backstop made a nice running catch going hard into the back fence, and scrambled to throw out a runner at first base after a third strike had bounced away from her.

Pinkus (3 RBI), Melissa Crowley-Buck (2 RBI) and Anderson (RBI) all had two hits in the game for Cohasset.

"Our season so far has been like a rollercoaster ride, but it definitely felt like we were on an upswing there in two games against Norwell," said Cohasset coach Deb Bostwick, who started the CHS softball program back up in JV play last spring after an eight year absence of the sport. "Norwell is a similar team to us. They're a young team that's struggling right now, but they've got a coach who's patient and anxious to teach. There were positives, I think, we could both take from this game."

The Lady Clippers lost one of its top players, junior third baseman/pitcher Courtney Berquist, to a sprained ankle midway through the game, and that really hurt their chances at a comeback.

The absence of Berquist was felt again 24 hours later at Norwell High, as pitching and defense proved extremely problematic for the host Lady Clippers, and played a big part in their coming up on the wrong side of a 17-14 decision.

There were 16 runs scored in the first two innings alone, Cohasset scoring 10 of those to take a four run lead.

The Skippers busted things open with seven runs in the top of the fourth, but their offense went into the tank after that, as Norwell sophomore pitcher Kelly-Anne Tobin hit her stride against the Cohasset subs, and her teammates began chipping away with their bats.

The host Clippers scored one run in the fourth and another in the fifth before exploding for six in the sixth inning to pull within three runs at 17-14.

Bostwick went back to Peraino, who'd started the game on the mound but came out after four innings, to close out the sixth inning.

Cohasset third baseman Rachel Doyle made two big defensive plays in the bottom of the seventh to preserve the win for her team. She robbed Norwell's leadoff hitter with a lunging backhand snare of a line drive that appeared ticketed for the left field corner and extra bases. With two runners on, Anderson was responsible for the second out, as she pounced on a Norwell bunt and threw quickly to first base. Doyle then close things out with a nice stop at third base and a perfect throw across the diamond.

"We bent, but we didn't break, and there's something to say for that," noted Cohasset coach Deb Bostwick,, whose team is now 3-7 on the season. "Our team on the whole maintained its composure and didn't get frazzled, and we had key people like Rachel Doyle and Casey Anderson step up big. That's what you need. That's what makes a team."

Andrea Keating (3-for-4, 2 RBI) and frosh Melissa Crowley-Buck (2-for-4, 5 RBI) paced the offensive assault for the winners, while Doyle, Anderson and Pinkus all went 2-for-5 with 2 RBI.

Both teams get back into action today, Norwell hosting Carver and Cohasset travelling to Abington (both games start at 3:30 p.m.).

Kahn finishes with 59 Goals to lead Swarthmore scorers

Former Cohasset lacrosse standout Jackie Kahn completed her junior season at Division Three Swarthmore College in Swarthmore, PA with 59 goals and eight assists to lead the Garnet Tide in scoring.

Kahn — whose team plays in the Centennial Conference, considered one of the two toughest leagues in the NCAA's D3 — finished sixth in the conference in both goals per game and points per game.

Kahn had three game-winning goals on the season, and had four games in which she scored five or more goals. She's expected to be named to the All-Conference team when it's announced later this month. Earlier in the season, she was selected for the Seven Sisters All-Tournament team, and was a four-time selection for the weekly Centennial Conference athletic Honor Roll this spring.

Kahn graduated from Cohasset High in 2001, where she co-captained the Lady Skippers.

Lady laxers hit a snag

Three straight losses drops CHS girls under .500

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

After a strong 3-1 start, the Cohaset High girls lacrosse team has hit a snag, three snags to be exact.

Consecutive losses to Duxbury, Sandwich and Bourne have left the Skippers with a season record of 3-4.

Cohasset had a chance to end the three-game losing streak on Tuesday when the Skippers were scheduled to take on Holliston.

In fact, the Skippers had three chances to get back on track this week with Scituate next up, followed by Nantucket at Nantucket on Saturday.

"We just have to get back on track," said Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney. "We got off to a nice start with our 3-1 record, and then fell apart. We gave it a good effort last Friday, but we came up short.

"The kids have been working hard to get back in the win column. Our goal is to make it back to the tourney again this season," declared Sweeney.

In Cohasset's last two efforts, the Skippers were defeated by Sandwich, 5-3, on Thursday, and lost to Bourne, 8-7, on Friday.

"It was a great effort by Cohasset against Bourne," said Sweeney. "At one point, Cohasset trailed 8-3, but came up with four straight goals to close the gap to 8-7. The kids put on the scoring burst in nine minutes. Unfortunately it just wasn't enough."

Two of the Cohasset scorers accounted for six of the seven goals with Nicole Turgiss and Maura McKinney each scoring three times.

"The effort against Bourne was good, but we've still got a lot of work to do," continued the second year head coach. "We have 11 games remaining to be played and we have to win half of the 16 games scheduled to qualify for the tourney."

Scituate, one of Cohasset's opponents this week, lost big to Duxbury last week and has still yet to win a game.

Star of the Week

Cohasset High three-sport athlete Cosimo Cambi was recently honored for athletic excellence, along with 24 other high school athletes of Italian decent from Eastern Massachusetts, by the Sons of Italy at a banquet in Boston.

Cosimo, who will graduate next month from Cohasset High and then head off to begin a tour with the U.S. Coast Guard, has been a standout wrestler and football player for CHS, and is this spring playing high school baseball for the first time ever in order to enjoy one last hurrah with several of his high school friends.

On June 20, Cosimo, a Mariner All-Scholastic Football selectee, will become the second CHS football player in recent memory to play in the Massachusetts Shriner's Game, making it two years in a row CHS has been represented (2002 grad Jason Brown).

There Is an Alternative to Nursing Home Care

Families today are in search of much needed care for their senior family members. Yet, they know that the institutional environment of a nursing home that focuses on ailments and infirmities is not always a good choice. There is a better senior living alternative—Sunrise Assisted Living.

Here, in a beautiful homelike setting, residents enjoy supportive health care for all the realities of advanced age and the promise of new friendships, too. Sunrise is a positive and lively senior living option, where quality of life is as great a priority as good physical care. And... Sunrise is significantly less expensive than a nursing home. A truly better value and a better life.

Abbey plant sale

Saturday, May 10 from 8:30 a.m. to noon, a large selection of plants will be for sale on the grounds of Glastonbury Abbey, 16 Hull St. (Route 228) in Hingham. Perennials, herbs, ground cover, ornamental grasses and bushes will be on sale. Plants are all being donated from local, private gardens in the Hingham-Cohasset area.

Many plants will be divisions of specimens grown in the Abbey gardens. Seedlings-to-mature plants will be available to tempt local gardeners who join us at our 10th plant sale.

Proceeds are donated to the Benedictine Monks of Glastonbury Abbey and are used to continue the beautification of the Abbey grounds. Please join us for some great plant bargains.

For information about this event, call the Plant Sale Committee through the Abbey at 781-749-2155.

Enjoy folk music at coffeehouse

Bill Staines returns to the Old Ship Church's Coffeehouse off the Square Saturday, May 17, at 8 p.m. Preceding him is Mark Purcell.

Purcell captivates with expressive guitar and harmonica playing, full-bodied songs, and warm, easy interaction with the audience. He has developed a style that is simple, direct, intrinsically American, yet universal. If you do not make his regular Wednesday night gig at the Snug in Hingham Square, this is your chance.

Staines, returns with his slices of Americana delivered with his rich, supple baritone, low-key humor, and gentle charm. The Lexington-born New Hampshire resident is known for cowboy songs and an occasional yodel, but he goes far beyond that. In a given concert his "honey-mellow" voice and effortless guitar playing give traditional ballads, romantic songs like his signature "Roseville Fair," and Gordon Lightfoot's "Early Morning Rain."

The coffeehouse is at the Old Ship Church's fully accessible Parish Hall, 107 Main St., Hingham Square, and a few doors up from the Loring Hall Theatre. Events begin with an open mic, allowing singers, dancers, poets, mimes, jugglers, storytellers . . . to be seen and heard by our attentive audience.

Tickets are $10 at the door and coffee, tea, cider, and homemade desserts are 50 cents. Net proceeds benefit programs of the Unitarian/Universalist Service Committee.

Local saxophonist in concert May 18

South Shore Conservatory presents saxophonist Earl Harmon in concert on Sunday, May 18, 4:30 p.m. in Cox Hall, One Conservatory Drive in Hingham.

Alternating between alto and soprano saxophones, Harmon's program features the music of Paul Creston, Halsey Stevens, Ravel and Faure. Pianist Steven G. Young, Chairperson of the Bridgewater State College Music Department, and pianist James Hays will accompany for the performance.

A Hingham resident, Harmon has performed with the Plymouth Philharmonic, Brockton Symphony, Hingham Symphony Orchestra, Metropolitan Wind Symphony, South Shore Wind Symphony Orchestras, and the Company Theatre Pit Orchestra.

Harmon has taught for South Shore Conservatory for 15 years, and coached for the Conservatory's renowned Summer Wind Ensemble program for 10 years. He holds bachelor of music education and bachelor of music degrees from New England Conservatory. Since graduation, Harmon has taught for 20 years in Newton, Scituate, Hingham, and Weymouth school systems. He has directed concert bands, marching bands and jazz ensembles, and has taught woodwind, brass, and percussion.

Admission to the May 18 concert is free. For more information, please call 781-749-7565, ext. 16. For directions to South Shore Conservatory, visit www.southshoreconservatory.org.

Poison ivy lady talks at Kennedy's

Heidi Ratner-Connolly, "Poison Ivy Lady of the South Shore," will be at Kennedy's Garden Center on May 17. Author of the best-seller, "Poison Ivy, Pets & People," Ratner-Connolly is one of Kennedy's Weekend Garden Lecture Series. After the lecture, she will be available for book signing, and to answer any and all questions. Register in advance for the 9:30 a.m. lecture ($5), or stop by for a chat after 10:30 a.m. Call 781-545-1266 for more information.

HSO Pops! for Mother's Day

Hingham Symphony Orchestras wraps up a successful season with two fun, festive Pops! concerts on Mother's Day weekend. Award-winning conductor Jin Kim leads the acclaimed, professional HSO in a variety of works inspired by romance and motherhood Gershwin's Catfish Row, the symphonic suite from Porgy & Bess, Ravel's Le jardin feerique from the Mother Goose Suite, Smetana's Overture to The Bartered Bride, and Tchaikovsky's Romeo and Juliet Overture.

In addition to lively music, the evening features a selection of wines, champagne, cheeses and desserts, table seating with your own group or with new friends, and several special prizes to be auctioned by silent, sealed bid, as a benefit for the HSO. As has become tradition, one lucky winner of an on-the-spot live auction will receive brief conducting lessons from Jin, before leading the orchestra in the thrilling finale, Stars and Stripes Forever.

The concerts will be held on Saturday, May 10 at 8 p.m. and Sunday, May 11 at 4 p.m. in the Temple Sha-Aray Shalom auditorium, 1112 Main St., Hingham. Tickets are $25 adults, $20 seniors, $10 through age 18. Call 781-740-5694 for availability for Saturday night. Tickets to Sunday's concert will be available at the door, or call to reserve. This popular concert is a great way to celebrate romance, motherhood, and music!

A night at the Pops

You don't need to travel into Boston to have a night at the "POPS" Cohasset High School music students will be performing cabaret style in the cafeteria on the evening of Tuesday, May 20, at 7:30 p.m.

Please join us for a night of music, singing and dancing. This is a popular annual fundraising event sponsored by the CHS Arts Boosters. There will be a $5 admission at the door. For further information call 383-6113.

SSL annual meeting

The Social Service League of Cohasset announces its annual meeting and coffee Tuesday, May 20, at 9:30 a.m. at Walton Rogers' Hall, St. Stephen Church, Highland Avenue.

Cabaret music

"Crossroads," a South Shore cabaret music ensemble, presents "A Measured Passage: Arrangements and Original Music" by Weymouth musician, Rich Jensen. The Crossroads ensemble performance will be held at the South Shore Art Center at 119 Ripley Rd., Cohasset on Friday, May 16 at 8 p.m. The concert features a variety of vocal arrangements for six voices ranging from old standards to new music set to the poetry of Robert Frost and Shakespeare.

Tickets at the door are $5. For more information, call 781-331-9545.

'Sound of Music' on stage in May

The Cohasset Dramatic Club presents "The Sound Of Music" at the Cohasset Town Hall. Remaining show dates are: May 9, 10, 16 & 17 at 7:30 p.m. and May 11, & 18 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $12 and are available at Buttonwood Books and Spring Brook Kids in Cohasset, Front Street Book Store in Scituate, at the door or by phone at 781-544-0304. Girl Scout Troops receive a $2 discount on advanced purchase tickets. Contact Barbara Baumgarten for details at 781-383-1834. Call 781-544-0304 to reserve tickets.

Alzheimer's benefit brunch at Saporito's

"A Taste of Spring: A Wine Tasting Brunch," is the 11th annual fund-raising event for the Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore, Inc. The festivities will take place at Saporito's Florence Club Café in Hull on Sunday, May 18 at 1 p.m.

The event includes a five-course gourmet menu. Each course is accompanied by a wine selected by Mark Lewis of M.S. Walker Company who will explain the fine art of blending foods and wines. The Joe Micarelli Trio will provide a jazz accompaniment to the food and wine. Again, Andy and Mary Ann Saporito Boothroyd have selected from their culinary favorites to present an exciting menu. Lucky winners will be chosen for baskets of gourmet foods and wines gathered for the occasion.

All proceeds from this event underwrite ADSGSS activities: it's monthly newsletter, outreach brochures, postage, family information packets and the help-line phone. ADSGSS, Inc. is a non-profit educational corporation that depends solely on public donations.

Reservations for this event, that benefits this meaningful cause must be made in advance. Tables may be arranged to accommodate four, five or eight people together at $65 per person. Please call JoAnn Mitchell at 781-749-5417, evenings, for reservations.

Faber in Wash., D.C.

U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs Secretary Anthony J. Principi briefed high school leaders about federal agency responsibilities at a Presidential Classroom Scholars seminar on March 3.

Scott Faber, a student at Cohasset High School in Cohasset was one of 250 other high school juniors and seniors that took part in the weeklong conference from March 1 to 8. The students, from 35 states, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and Canada, spent the week discussing key political issues and observing the political process at work o Capitol Hill.

The week also featured seminars by the Honorable Charles Louis Kincannon, director of the U.S. Bureau of the Census and General Robert Foglesong, vice chief of staff of the U.S. Air Force. Highlights of the week. included appointments with members of Congress, a mock presidential election and a performance by the political satire troupe, the Capitol Steps.

For more information, contact Presidential Classroom at 119 Oronoco St., Alexandria, Va 22314, 1-800-4416533 or visit presidential Classroom's web site at www.presidentialclassroom.org.

OBITUARIES

John H. Winters

John H. Winters III, 60, a lifelong resident of Cohasset, died May 6, 2003, at his home following a brief illness.

Born in Providence, R.I., Mr. Winters was raised and educated in the Cohasset school system and was a graduate of the Maine Maritime Academy. He then served for three tours of duty with the Merchant Marine during the Vietnam War.

Mr. Winters was a marine engineer by profession and following his war service was a First Engineer with Grace Lines of New York. For the past nine years he served as Harbormaster for the town of Cohasset, a position he held at the time of his death.

He was a member of the Hancock Masonic Lodge of Castine, Maine.

He leaves his wife, Joanne (Magner) Winter, and two daughters, Ruth Marine Winters and Nancy Elizabeth Winters, all of Cohasset; a sister, Martha W. Powell, and her husband, Allyn H. Powell, of New Canaan, Conn.; a niece, Susan W. Pollio of Darien, Conn.; a nephew, Jay Powell of Fairfield, Conn.; and several grandnieces and grandnephews.

A Memorial Service will be conducted Wednesday, May 14, at 11 a.m. at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset.

Visiting hours and flowers are omitted by request. In lieu of flowers, memorial contributions may be made to the Massachusetts General Hospital Development Office, 100 Charles River Plaza, Suite 600, Boston, 02114; or to the John H. Winters III Scholarship Fund, c/o Pilgrim Cooperative Bank, 48 South Main St., Cohasset, 02025.

The interment is to be private.

Arrangements are by the Downing Cottage Funeral Chapel in Hingham.

Etta L. Lincoln

Etta Lillian (Stoddard) Lincoln, a lifelong resident of Cohasset, died Feb. 8, 2003, at the Cohasset Knoll Nursing Home following a brief illness. Mrs. Lincoln was 87.

Born in Cohasset, Mrs. Lincoln attended area schools.

She was a deaconess and lifelong member of the Beechwood Congregational Church in Cohasset.

Mrs. Lincoln was a member of the American Legion Women's Auxiliary in Cohasset, past president of the 60-Plus Club, member of the Harborview Tenants Association for the Housing for the Elderly, the Cohasset Strutters Walking Group and longtime volunteer of various organizations in Cohasset.

She enjoyed quilting, reading, walking and singing in her church choir.

Wife of the late Lawrence F. Lincoln Sr., she leaves a son, Lawrence F. Lincoln Jr. of Cohasset; three daughters, Priscilla Trush of Seattle, Wash., Martha Lincoln of Franklinville, N.J. and Elizabeth Lincoln of Vineland, N.J.; two brothers, Sheldon Stoddard and David Stoddard; three sisters, Nellie Lincoln, Olive Morris and Hannah Sawyers; three grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren. She was sister of the late Charles Stoddard, Elmer Stoddard and Mildred Salyards.

A Memorial Service will be held Saturday, May 10, at 11 a.m. at Beechwood Congregational Church, 51 Church St., Cohasset.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Memorial contributions may be made to the Beechwood Congregational Church.

Laura E. Connor

Laura Elizabeth (Roy) Connor of Annapolis, Md., a former resident of Cohasset for 44 years, died May 3, 2003, at the Ginger Cove Hospital in Annapolis following a brief illness.

Born in Somerville, Mrs. Connor was raised in Nova Scotia and Boston.

While living in Cohasset, she was a member of St. Anthony Roman Catholic Church, where she was active in the choir as well as the Ladies Sodality. She also gave generously of her time to the Girl Scouts and in her later years participated in the Senior Olympics, winning a gold medal in her event.

A graduate of UMass Boston with a major in business administration, Mrs. Connor worked for more than 20 years in the Government Real Estate Properties Division.

Wife of the late Charles F. Connor, she leaves two daughters, Mary Dobbs of Glastonbury, Conn. and Deborah Vitins of Mechanicsburg, Pa.; two sons, Charles Connor of Bradford and Edward Roy Connor of Severn, Md.; two sisters, Beatrice Hosford of Connecticut and Ann Lovell of Maine; and eight grandchildren. She was sister of the late John Roy.

A funeral Mass will be celebrated Thursday, May 8, at 10 a.m. at St. Anthony Church, Summer St., Cohasset. Interment will be in Milton Cemetery.

Arrangements are by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

James E. Hoban

James E. Hoban Jr., 71, of Brockton, a retired plant engineer, U.S. Army Veteran and amateur genealogist died, Friday, May 2, 2003 at the New England Sinai Hospital in Stoughton after a long struggle with leukemia.

Born June 2,1931 in Weymouth, he was the son of the late James F. and Zelma (Beals) Hoban. He attended Weymouth and Braintree public schools, and graduated from Weymouth Vocational Technical High School with a specialty in auto mechanics.

Mr. Hoban was drafted into the Army in 1951, underwent basic training in Fort Dix, New Jersey, and then shipped out to Korea where he was attached to the U.S. Air Force's 802nd Engineer Aviation Battalion as a radio operator. He saw action during several engagements in Korea, and attained the rank of corporal before being honorably discharged from the service in 1953.

Returning to Braintree, he opened Slim's Shop, his own auto-repair garage, and then went to work as a fireman on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad's Old Colony Division. In 1959, he joined Hermetite Corporation, a maker of glass-to-metal seals, as a draftsman. After the company's move from Boston to Avon, he became the firm's plant engineer, a position he retained until his retirement in 1995.

Mr. Hoban threw himself into a succession of hobbies throughout his life. He raced stock cars as a young man at Norwood Arena, built and flew radio-controlled model airplanes for many years, and ultimately trained himself as an amateur genealogist, an interest he pursued vigorously for the last two decades of his life.

He was a former trustee and treasurer of the Dyer Memorial Library in Abington; a past president and member of the Plymouth County Genealogists; a member of the South Shore and Cape Cod genealogists; a member of the New England Genealogists and Historical Society; a member of the Scituate, Norwell, Hanover, Braintree and Bridgewater historical societies; a life member, past president and genealogist of the Stetson Kindred of America; a former member of the Avon Rod and Gun Club; a member of various model airplane clubs; a life member of the Massachusetts Society of Mayflower Descendants and the General Society of Mayflower Descendants.

He leaves no immediate survivors.

A funeral mass was held on Tuesday at Holy Family Church in Rockland. Internment was at Holy Family Cemetery. Memorial donations may be made to the Dyer Memorial Library, 28 Centre Ave., P.O. Box 2245, Abington, MA 02351.

Robert W. Lewis

Robert W. Lewis, 49, of Cohasset, died suddenly on May 4, 2003.

Mr. Lewis was born in Brooklyn, N.Y. and moved to Hingham. He was a graduate of Hingham High School and Colgate University, he received his MBA from The Sloan School of Management, at M.T.T.

He was part owner and director of Cogentrix Energy Inc. and a trustee of Derby Academy, Hingham. His love of nature and sports was only surpassed by his love for his wife and daughters. He touched the life of so many.

Mr. Lewis leaves his wife, Kearin (Paredes) Lewis; two daughters, Katherine and Suzanne; his parents, George and Betty Lewis of Hingham and Charlotte, N.C., his wife's parents, John and Jill Paredes of Hingham; two brothers David and his wife, Mary, and James and his wife, Michelle, all of Charlotte, N.C.; two brothers-in-law, Kevin Paredes and his wife, Catherine, of Wappinger Falls, N.Y., Glennon Paredes and his wife, Barbara, of South Natick, Ma.; a niece and six nephews.

He was the brother-in-law of the late Gregory Paredes.

Interment was private. Friends and family are respectfully invited to attend a memorial service in St. Anthony's Church, Summer St., Cohasset, Ma. Friday, May 9, at 12:30 p.m. A reception immediately following the Mass in St. Anthony's Parish Center.

Arrangements were handled by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, One Summer St., Cohasset, Ma. 02025.

Contributions in his memory may be made to the C.Y.B.S.A.,(Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association, P.O. Box 121, Cohasset, MA 02025.

POLICE LOG, PAGE 27

Twenty-three arrests in April

April was a very busy month for the Cohasset Police Department, Police Chief Robert Jackson said.

There were 23 arrests, eight for minor in possession of liquor, four for operating under the influence of liquor, two for operating with a suspended license, one for larceny of a motor vehicle, two for unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle, one for possession of a Class D substance, two for assault and battery, one for larceny, one for an outstanding warrant and one for protective custody.

During the month of April, the Police Department investigated nine motor vehicle accidents, five of which resulted in personal injury. There were 150 motor vehicle citations issued totaling $4,380 in fines. Additionally there were 71 parking tickets issued for $2,075 in fines.

Also in April the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 1,103 calls for police services, of those 116 were Emergency 911 calls, Jackson said.

In the month of April there was one breaking and entering of a residence. Additionally there were six criminal complaints issued for the month.

Finally in April the Cohasset Police Department sponsored the Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council Recertification Program for State Firearms Instructors. Twenty officers from 12 surrounding towns attended this program. All of these officers qualified on side arms, shot guns and patrol rifles. James Ring, Massachusetts State Police Head Firearms Instructor, oversaw this course.

Cohasset Police support 'Click It or Ticket Campaign'

Chief Robert W. Jackson announced the Cohasset Police Department will join more than 280 Massachusetts local police departments and the State Police in support of the May Mobilization of the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau's Click It or Ticket Campaign from May 12 to June 1. The department has a $4000 grant to support its involvement in the campaign.

"We strongly urge those using Massachusetts roadways during the May 'Click It or Ticket Mobilization' to drive sober and well-rested, to obey posted speed limits, to allow extra travel time for emergencies, and to make sure everyone is properly buckled up," said Jackson. "People should know we are serious about saving lives by enforcing traffic laws, in particular those involving safety belts and child safety seats."

The Governor's Highway Safety Bureau's "Click It or Ticket Campaign," made possible by a federal highway safety grant, combines traffic enforcement, paid and non-paid media messages as well as community education. During three holiday periods in 2002-2003 that the Click It or Ticket Campaign was in effect — Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's motor vehicle-related deaths were cut by more than 60 percent as compared to those same holiday periods in 2001-2002. For more information, go to www.mass.gov/ghsb.

There were seven fatalities from motor vehicle crashes during the three-day Memorial Day Holiday period in Massachusetts in 2002.

Jackson provided the following information on safety belts, booster seats and child safety seats:

· Safety belts reduce the risk of death or serious injury in a motor vehicle crash by half. Yet a 2002 statewide survey conducted by the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau found only 51 percent of front seat occupants wear safety belts in Massachusetts as compared to 75 percent belt use nationwide. The lowest usage rate was among teens at 50 percent.

"People should know we are serious about saving lives by enforcing traffic laws, in particular those involving safety belts and child safety seats."
— Police Chief Robert Jackson

· Massachusetts law requires all drivers and passengers to be properly restrained in a safety belt, booster seat or child safety seat. A driver may be stopped by police solely for having a child 12 years of age or younger improperly restrained ($25 fine per unbuckled occupant).

· Massachusetts law requires children under five and weighing 40 pounds or less to ride properly secured in a child safety seat. Children five and older and weighing over 40 pounds must wear a safety belt. For maximum safety, children 40 to 80 pounds should ride in a booster seat. Children over 80 pounds and taller than 4ft. 9 ins. are ready for an adult safety belt.

· Children 12 years of age and under, especially those riding in a rear-facing child safety seat, should always ride properly restrained in the back seat away from an air bag.

Funky junk

What's old is new in NRAS exhibit 'Truth and Circumstance'

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

One person's trash is another person's treasure.

Or so goes the slogan that's been adopted as much of the motive behind the three-dimensional, mixed media sculpture genre of modern art.

"Truth and Circumstance" is an exhibition showcasing the genre by artist and North River Arts Society office manager Laura Harvey, on view in the front room gallery at NRAS G.A.R. Hall headquarters in Marshfield through Sunday (May 11). The show attempts to take the slogan a few steps beyond, combining inventive energy and resources to make it seem as cliched and understated as the generic title mixed media.

Overall, "Truth and Circumstance" succeeds and impresses. Harvey's assemblages of such discarded and found items as wooden cigar boxes, old windows and slabs of textured board contain detailed decor comprised of other, smaller trivial articles like S&H Green Stamps, squashed bottle caps and bent nails, forming whole compositions that visually become greater than the sum of their parts, sometimes even turning the ridiculous into the sublime.

"I begin each piece differently, sometimes starting with a title and then working the art around that — or I might go with a particular theme," said Harvey in her artist's statement for the show. "Sometimes I simply gather a bunch of treasured junk together and then tie it together with other treasured junk. In most cases, the work ends up straying from my original idea, but so far, I've been happy with the results!"

"Most of my pieces incorporate a number of found objects with paint and other media. I am constantly experimenting with new adhesives, texturizing mediums, such as paste wax, sand, fabric and even sawdust," Harvey said.

"Truth and Circumstance" is titled after a weekly humor column that Harvey wrote for the Marshfield Mariner for five

Family helping former musician Tony Scheuren find fame posthumously

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

They're known as recording studio auteurs, a certain breed of usually rock or pop musician who endeavors to become a multi-functional, one-man production team in any given recording project, often playing all instruments and performing all vocals as well as handling all writing, composing, production and mixing work themselves in home-built studios.

Some of the more famous of these characters include Brian Wilson, Todd Rundgren, Stevie Wonder and Lindsay Buckingham along with a growing number of self-styled studio hermits of the current generation such as Moby.

On a more obscure level, another such independent home-studio wizard resided in Hingham until a decade ago. Tony Scheuren, a former music/show-biz professional, spent most of his free hours when not supporting himself at various occupations as a carpenter, lobsterman, freelance videographer — tucked away in his own self-built studio at his house overlooking the waterfront in Hingham's Crow Point, where he created a virtual musical universe. Scheuren produced over some fifteen years boxloads of home-made tapes of original music all self-performed on vocals, guitars, keyboards, bass and drums. Most of it was in a reflective, folk and jazz-influenced singer/songwriter style comparable to James Taylor, Micheal McDonald and younger such artists as David Gray.

Through his family's efforts, Tony Scheuren may find his place as another fabled musical archetype, the creative artist more recognized in death than in life.

Scheuren died of alcoholism at age 45 in 1993. Recently, the late singer/musician's sister, Margot Scheuren, and her husband, Ron Martinez, both of Mansfield, have launched a long-term series of projects dedicated to keeping her brother's music and memory alive through their Web sites at whamrecords.com and beaconagency.com. The first of these, a Tony Scheuren CD titled "Gaining On You," has just gained national distribution and is currently available at amazon.com and barnesandnoble.com with shipping for online and storefront retail set for May 6.

Through his family's efforts, Tony Scheuren may find his place as another fabled musical archetype, the creative artist more recognized in death than in life.

"When Tony passed away, he left behind a trunk filled with lyrics to more than 140 songs and boxes with nearly 200 reel-to-reel tapes here in the basement," said Margot Scheuren from her brother's old Hingham house which still contains remnants of his home-studio, tapes, notes and equipment. "These tapes contain more than 50 songs that Tony wrote, arranged and home recorded on multi-track. There's easily enough material here for two or three more CDs, at least 36 more songs that can be mastered,

Pop singer makes Plymouth tour stop

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Taylor Dayne burst on to the pop music scene 15 years ago with her debut album, "Tell It To My Heart," which produced four top ten singles including the title song. On the strength of mega-hits like "Prove Your Love" and "Don't Rush Me," as well as the number one smash "Love Will Lead You Back" from her follow-up album, "Can't Fight Fate," the songstress quickly earned icon status with often fickle dance-pop fans.

Taylor Dayne plays Plymouth Memorial Hall May 17.

It was a combination of support from those loyal fans and Dayne's own powerhouse voice that helped propel her from hit record-maker to successful concert performer, a talent she'll demonstrate on May 17 at Plymouth Memorial Hall.

"After my first two albums and all the hit records, I was a big pop star," Dayne, 41, explained by telephone last week. "Now, I'm sticking around as a working artist."

And work Dayne has, with three more albums, sold out world-wide concert tours, acting roles in feature films and television, and nine months on Broadway in the Elton John and Tim Rice musical, "Aida."

"I've toured since the very beginning of my career," Dayne points out. "Being on the road has its downside, but I know I can always trust my instincts as a singer. Acting is a whole other story. It takes a lot of courage and is a lot of work, but I really enjoy it."

Dayne appeared with Warren Beatty and Annette Bening in the 1994 feature, "Love Affair," and in the 1997 releases "Fools Paradise" and "Stag." She will also be seen in the upcoming release, "Joshua Tree." Two years ago, she got to combine her skills as a singer and actress when she made her

Vanilla ice cream toppings II

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

A few months ago, I offered a few simple homemade toppings for vanilla ice cream including chocolate, caramel and raspberry sauces. The response was so strong that I now offer another group of sauces: butterscotch, a Bananas Foster topping, and a simple combination of sugar and liqueur for strawberries.

Butterscotch Sauce

Butterscotch is a tricky business. The flavor one usually associates with butterscotch is from candies or puddings that are artificially flavored. The basic ingredients are brown sugar, butter, cream, rum or scotch, and perhaps vanilla, an ingredient I have often used to boost the taste of butterscotch. My initial recipe testing proved a few things. One, the rum or scotch is essential for true flavor; two, a pinch of salt helps to boost flavor and three, making a caramelized sugar syrup (the process used to make caramel) is unnecessary. So I began with a cup of light brown sugar, a stick of butter, a half-cup of heavy cream, and a pinch of salt.

My first test revealed that dark brown sugar was a no-go: it has too much molasses and creates a bitter flavor. Light brown sugar was the winner. (Regular white sugar had too little flavor.) A full stick of butter was too much of a good thing so I reduced it to 6 tablespoons and the half-cup of cream was just fine. A tablespoon of scotch was helpful for depth and warmth, although kids may object to it. (This is an adults-only recipe if you leave it in.) Vanilla turned out to be unnecessary. As for process, I liked the sauce best if the butter and sugar were melted until smooth and then the cream was added followed by the scotch (which is added off the heat). If the cream was cooked with the other ingredients the sauce wasn't as smooth, shiny or rich.

BUTTERSCOTCH SAUCE

Leftover sauce may be stored in the refrigerator for several days. To reheat, place over very low heat, stirring often, until warm. Omit the scotch if serving this sauce to children.

1 cup light brown sugar
6 tablespoons unsalted butter
Big pinch of salt
1/2 cup heavy cream
1 tablespoon scotch, rum or bourbon

Place the sugar and butter in a small saucepan over medium-low heat. Cook, stirring often, until the mixture is thick, shiny, and smooth, about 3 to 4 minutes. The sugar will look grainy at first but it will smooth out. Add the salt and cream and stir until well combined and the sauce is even glossier. Off heat, add the scotch. Cool until warm and serve over vanilla ice cream.

Makes 2 cups

BANANAS FOSTER

Bananas Foster is simple enough, just bananas sautéed in butter, sugar, and rum with perhaps a pinch of cinnamon. Instead of the usual long lengths used in the recipe I went with 1/2-inch slices. For me, the bite-sized banana coins are easier to work with.

I decided on three bananas, which is enough to top at least four bowls of ice cream and cover the bottom of a 10-inch skillet. For the right balance of butter and sugar I ended up using equal amounts of both. I tried white, light brown and dark brown sugar and definitely preferred light brown for its subtle molasses flavor. I tested other sweeteners including maple syrup (good but the dish reminded me of French toast) and honey (a poor marriage with the rum). So for three bananas I used 3 tablespoons each butter and brown sugar. I wanted a nice bit of rum, and found 2 tablespoons gave lots of flavor. (I find dark rum — specifically Myers — works best in desserts.) These three ingredients cook up into a thick syrup in no time. Instead of sautéing the bananas first, as many recipes do, I added them at the end for a minute or so. The slices warm and soften slightly in very short time. I did add a pinch of cinnamon, which perfumes the sauce nicely. Other ingredients such as orange juice, orange liqueur, nutmeg, cloves, allspice, wine, chocolate, coffee and coffee liqueur were all tried and rejected.

BANANAS FOSTER TOPPING

Unripe bananas produce a horrid topping but do make sure that they are firm.

3 tablespoons unsalted butter
3 tablespoons light brown sugar
2 tablespoons dark rum, Myers preferred
Pinch of cinnamon
3 firm but ripe bananas cut into 1/2-inch thick coins

Place the butter and sugar in a 10- or 12-inch heavy-duty skillet over medium heat. Cook until the butter and sugar are melted, stirring to combine, about 2 minutes. Add the rum and cinnamon and cook until the liquid is thick and shiny, 1 to 2 minutes more. Add the banana slices and cook until warm and slightly softened, turning once with a large spatula, about 90 seconds more. Serve immediately over vanilla ice cream.

Makes 4 generous servings.

FRESH STRAWBERRIES IN A QUICK SAUCE

This "sauce" can be made a day ahead of time.

1 quart strawberries wiped clean with a damp paper towel
1/3 cup sugar
1 1/2 tablespoons orange liqueur such as Cointreau or Gran Marnier

Halve or quarter the berries into bite-sized pieces. Place 1 1/4 cups berry pieces in the bowl of a food processor along with the sugar and liqueur. Puree until smooth. Pour over remaining strawberries and refrigerate for 1/2 hour to overnight. Serve spooned over ice cream.

Makes about 2 1/2 cups or enough for 5 to 6 generous servings.

years during the 1990s. Currently, the artist also paints furniture for children, which is available for sale in local shops as well as on view at galleries in Brookline, Cambridge and Chatham.

Humor, of a distinctly ironic and offbeat sort, certainly figures in Harvey's artwork also. Titles such as "Snap! It Stays," "Pick One for Fun" and "Hammerhead Snarks" give an indication of the artist's mirthful muse, as do such left-field concepts as the juxtaposed faded Butterfinger wrapper and wooden shoe of "Butterfingers and Twinkletoes," the plastic ducks and wooden letter blocks of "Rhymes with Luck" and the driftwood/tree trunk framing a TV screen of "KnotHead (Premier Episode)," which portrays a fantasy soap opera for elves.

The various collages give viewers a feast of images from familiar childhood toys and various tools of adult trades (dominoes are a frequently recurring items among the pieces) to a Ouija board, old comic book clippings and old black-and-white photos of subjects from Harvey's grand-relatives to digitally altered celebrities (such as Marilyn Monroe in one piece). Together, they offer an artistic, even poignant, reminder that any of thousands of odd and trivial items seen and experienced through modern life may be discarded at some point, but their visual images are never really forgotten.

"I create my art inside wooden cigar boxes, on textured board, on old windows, even on sections of old fence. The base of each piece is where it starts," she said. "Background textures are built up, tinted with paint or wax, and then I begin adding other elements — the found objects, the bits of paper and lace, items that work together — with or without any special meaning — to bring the entire piece together."

Harvey's exhibit "Truth and Circumstance" can be viewed at the NRAS gallery inside the GAR Hall on Old Main Street in Marshfield Hills through Sunday, May 11. For more information call the NRAS at 837-8091.

which we have planned for release in the future."

"Many people from around the country have already purchased copies of the first CD or expressed interest in it through our Web sites, and it's been very heartening with the responses we've had from many of them. People have e-mailed or called to tell us that they've been really touched by Tony's music. We felt from the beginning when we undertook this project that Tony's music had a certain inviting and sometimes spiritual quality that could connect with people," Scheuren said.

As a former music-biz pro, Tony Scheuren's name and work is familiar to more than a few rock and hip-culture fans of the 1960s and 70s. Particularly in the Boston area, where in the 60s Scheuren was a member of two of the city's hippie-era, psychedelic bands, Chamaeleon (sic) Church and Ultimate Spinach. These bands were both part of what was then known as The Bosstown Sound, which actually became a rather infamous marketing scam by MGM records that is much better detailed in print elsewhere. What the bands also had in common was future national celebrity members; Chamaeleon Church boasted none other than a pre-Saturday Night Live Chevy Chase on drums, while Ultimate Spinach more notably included on guitar Jeff "Skunk" Baxter, who moved on to guitar-hero fame with the Doobie Brothers, Steely Dan and as a session player in the 70s.

Scheuren kept in touch with Chase and in the early 70s rejoined him and the likes of John Belushi, Gilda Radner and Bill Murray in the crew of the then very irreverent and cutting edge National Lampoon off-Broadway stage shows and Radio Hour. Scheuren's specialty with Lampoon was song parodies of the era's rock and pop stars, such as his most noteworthy - hilarious, stinging send-ups of James Taylor ("Methodone Maintenance Man") and Neil Young ("Southern California Brings Me Down"). The infamous Taylor spoof is currently honored by being played daily on the Imus In the Morning show.

Margot Scheuren and her husband are looking into the prospects of reissuing her brother's 60s Boston band and 70s Lampoon recordings on CD for online and retail availability as well.

Said Scheuren, "Tony just had a natural ability as a musician. He began playing guitar and banjo early on and grew up on The Kingston Trio and Everly Brothers harmonies. And he had an amazing ability to just listen to those styles and immediately pick out the melodies and vocals and start playing and singing them. Later when he began listening to the Beatles, he could just walk right over to an instrument and start playing their songs. There was also a genuine warmth to him as a person that I think comes out on these tapes of his original songs, and it's our commitment to get them out into the market and heard by the public."

Flowering trees for the spring landscape

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

The long-anticipated signs of spring greet enthusiastic gardeners around every corner following a week of moderate warmth and brilliant sunshine. In only a matter of days, it seems as if every tree and shrub has suddenly exploded into bloom. Despite the chilly blasts of a seemingly endless winter season, this year's springtime floral display is truly breathtaking. Colorful splashes of sunny yellows, fiery oranges, luscious pinks, glistening white, and rosy purples have magically transformed our dormant landscapes into a momentary fairyland of unparalleled beauty.

There are so many magnificent, spring-blooming trees from which to choose, including cherries and plums, magnolias, pears, dogwoods, and crabapples to name only a few. Before making your selections, particularly of larger, more permanent woody plants, be sure to analyze your site and determine a suitable location for your acquisitions based on their soil and light requirements and their ultimate size. Small scale, ornamental trees are usually preferred for foundation plantings, gardens, or smaller properties. Larger trees tend to be better for open spaces where they can provide shade or screening.

Look for trees and shrubs that offer multiple seasons of interest. While the appearance of flowers seems to be the primary concern of most homeowners, most flowering trees and shrubs bloom for a very brief period, perhaps a week or two at most. Consider other attributes, as well, including attractive forms during the winter months, mottled or exfoliating bark, colorful fruit, handsome foliage throughout the season or fantastic fall color.

There are numerous early bloomers available that provide many of these desirable characteristics. The Magnolia family offers several handsome specimens of multi-stemmed trees with spectacular, lightly fragrant, spring blossoms, although the appearance of their voluptuous flowers often coincides with a hard frost which usually spoils their magnificent blooms. Grow in deep, moist, acid soils to which organic matter has been added. They perform best in sun but will tolerate partial shade. Large, fuzzy, silky-gray flower buds appear in late summer and are attractive throughout the winter months. Mature magnolias may reach a height of 30 feet with elegant forms and lovely pewter-gray, speckled bark.

Magnolia soulangeana, commonly known as the saucer magnolia, may have blossoms up to 10 inches across. These showy, rose-pink and cream-colored flowers are so stunning that you can forgive the unsightly display produced by the petals once they drop. The star magnolia, Magnolia stellata, with glistening white flowers, tends to bloom even earlier, and is more shrub-like in habit.

Numerous cultivars of magnolias have become readily available in recent years that provide even greater diversity in bloom color and extend the bloom season. Several hybrids such as M. loebneri 'Leonard Messel', M. 'Ricki' and M. 'Susan' produce lilac-colored blooms later in the spring season which often avoids the damage of late-season frosts. Additional varieties bear soft yellow blossoms including M. 'Elizabeth' and M. 'Goldfinch'.

Gorgeous displays of bright pink or white blossoms are provided by the diverse family of decorative spring bloomers which includes the cherries, plums, prunes, peaches and almonds, all members of the genus Prunus. Adaptable to most well-drained soils, they require full sun for optimal flowering, which tends to be extremely fleeting. Some may be short-lived but they are truly glorious in their prime. Members of this family are prone to borers, caterpillars and other insects and should be monitored regularly to maintain healthy specimens.

Weeping cherries are particularly popular despite their brief bloom period and are often used in foundation plantings, their pendulous form providing beauty in all seasons. The pale-pink to white flowers appear in profusion prior to the appearance of their leaves in early spring. The cultivar 'Snow Fountain' has become increasingly fashionable due to its compact habit and colorful fall foliage, making it an ideal specimen for smaller properties or foundation plantings. P. 'Hally Jolivette', which produces pale pink blossoms, is more shrub-like in habit but another good choice for smaller spaces. The purple-leafed plum displays white to pink-tinted flowers with contrasting handsome, dark foliage for a long season of colorful foliage.

Few trees rival the beauty of the early-blooming ornamental pears. Rapidly gaining in popularity in recent years for use as street trees in both urban and residential areas, these perfectly-formed trees produce magnificent clouds of pure white blossoms followed by deep green, glossy leaves which persist well into the fall, turning a rich, deep bronze. These handsome specimens are tolerant of drought, poor soils, and pollution and seldom require pruning. Grow in full sun for optimum flowering and leaf color. Mature specimens may reach a height of 30 feet, depending on the cultivar, making them rather large for many foundation plantings but handsome additions to the general landscape as a focal point or to line driveways or roadways. A street lined with flowering pears in full bloom is absolutely breathtaking.

The 'Bradford' pear (Pyrus calleryana) is one of the more popular cultivars but mature specimens are prone to damage during storms. More recent selections, such as P. calleryana 'Red Spire' and P. 'Aristocrat', are less susceptible to breakage and smaller in stature. Few species of trees offer as many positive attributes and low-maintenance as the ornamental pears.

Visit your local nurseries to view a wide array of beautiful specimen trees and consult their experts to determine the best selection for your own landscape.

Broadway debut as Princess Amneris in "Aida."

"It was great to be living and working full-time in New York," recalls the Long Island native. "Theater is tough, because you do eight shows a weeks, but when it's Elton John and Tim Rice you can't exactly say no. Your voice really builds up strength, too, because you're working and using it all the time."

Dayne's voice can not only be heard on her own albums, but also on several movie soundtracks including one new Disney release that may just introduce her to a whole new demographic.

"I did a cover of 'Supermodel' for the soundtrack of 'The Lizzie McGuire Movie,' which was a lot of fun."

Dayne is also working on her own new album.

"I'm just back from five months in Vienna where we recorded nine songs for my next album. It's got a lot of really strong ballads and music that people will recognize as mine," says the singer/songwriter. "We hope to have a single out later this summer, and the album should be released next year."

In the meantime, Dayne will happily keep busy with concerts.

"When I'm on-stage, the connection with the audience is indescribable. There is nothing quite like it."

(Taylor Dayne will perform in concert on May 17 at Plymouth Memorial Hall, 83 Court Street, Plymouth. For tickets and information, call 866/468-7619 or visit www.ticketweb.com.)

A 'Fever' you'll want to catch

Copley Theatre hosts Peggy Lee tribute

For more than 50 years, singer Peggy Lee mesmerized audiences with an intimate, almost hypnotic style that was all her own. Lee's sultry voice first gained notice in 1941 when she became the featured female singer with The Benny Goodman Orchestra. With Goodman, Lee scored her first big hit 60 years ago with "Why Don't You Do Right?".

In the decades that followed, she recorded other hits like "Manana," "Is That All There Is?" and her signature song, "Fever." She also earned considerable respect as the composer of pop standards and film scores and as a film actress, earning an Academy Award nomination as best supporting actress for the 1955 drama "Pete Kelly's Blues." Lee passed away last year at age 81. Contemporary singers from Diana Krall to Joe Cocker and even Madonna have recorded covers of Peggy Lee standards.

This week at Boston's Copley Theatre, HT Productions is presenting "Fever! A Tribute to Miss Peggy Lee," the only touring show based on the legendary vocalist's music. Written by Lezlie Anders, who also stars as Lee, the revue was co-created by Buddy Greco, who conducts the 16-piece Benny Goodman Tribute Big Band. A famed jazz pianist and arranger, Greco has appeared locally many times at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset and the long-defunct, but still legendary Blinstrub's Nightclub in South Boston. Like Lee, but only a decade later, Greco's career was also launched by Benny Goodman.

"Benny played an important role in both our lives," the 76-year-old Greco recalls. "He brought us both to national attention and he taught us about being perfectionists." These days, Anders, 54, plays the most important role in Greco's life as his wife and collaborator.

Buddy Greco and Lezlie Anders appear in "Fever! A Tribute To Miss Peggy Lee" through May 11 at the Copley Theatre, 225 Clarendon Street, Boston. For tickets and information, call 617/931-2787 or visit www.ticketmaster.com Senior discounts are available for matinee performances.

Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127
THE COMPLETE STORY
The smallest hearing instrument, the completely-in-the-canal (CIC) hearing instrument, is practically invisible to an observer. It fits deep inside the ear canal, where it can most closely duplicate the natural hearing process. Close placement of the receiver (speaker) to the eardrum provides sound with a natural boost in loudness, while the microphone sits near the ear canal to simulate natural sound reception. This type of hearing device is best suited to those with mild to moderate hearing loss and an ear canal large enough to accommodate the insertion depth of the device. A completely-in-the-canal hearing instrument is usually not recommended for those with dexterity problems because they are very small instruments with batteries commensurate with their size.
Millions of Americans face the daily challenge of dealing with a hearing loss. And while the number of hearing impaired individuals is on the rise, so too are the ways of dealing with hearing impairment. If you or a loved one fall victim to hearing loss, don't suffer in silence. Instead, discuss CIC hearing instruments and today's other tiny options that are available with a Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. PH: 781-337-1144.
P.S. Completely-in-the-canal instruments can have conventional, programmable analogue, or digital technology housed in their tiny casings.

HSO Pops! for Mother's Day

Hingham Symphony Orchestras wraps up a successful season with two fun, festive Pops! concerts on Mother0s Day weekend. Award-winning conductor Jin Kim leads the acclaimed, professional HSO in a variety of works inspired by romance and motherhood - Gershwin's Catfish Row, the symphonic suite from Porgy & Bess, Ravel's Le jardin feerique from the Mother Goose Suite, Smetana's Overture to The Bartered Bride, and Tchaikovskys Romeo and Juliet Overture. The concerts will be held on Saturday, May 10, at 8 p.m. and Sunday, May 11, at 4 p.m. in the Temple Sha-Aray Shalom auditorium, 1112 Main St. Hingham. Tickets, at $25 adults, $20 seniors, $10 through age 18, are available in advance at Hingham Public Library, Noble's Hingham Square and Queen Anne Corner, Cards & Shards, Cohasset, and Front Street Book Shop, Scituate, or call 781-740-5694 to reserve.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7

The Cancer moon aligns with Venus at 12:21 a.m. and becomes inactive until this evening. The sun aligns with retrograde Mercury at 3:2T a.m. Take extra time out for yourself this morning; look within for answers. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Pluto adds depth and intensity to today's planetary picture. You can achieve breakthroughs creatively and express yourself in new ways. At 9:46 p.m. the moon enters Leo. Fun and games are back in the picture.

THURSDAY, MAY 8

A polarity of Mars and Jupiter takes the spotlight today, warning you to cool your heels. Don't jump into anything. The Leo moon underscores its influence, when it interacts with Jupiter and Mars this afternoon. This combination generates good feelings, high energy. On the other hand, look before you leap. There may be a tendency to overdo, overextend your resources, act foolishly. A lunar opposition to Neptune affects this evening. Kick back, enjoy; don't take anything or anyone too seriously.

FRIDAY, MAY 9

Astrological blue skies and sunshine prevail. Try to get work projects out of the way early in the day, so that you can enjoy the remainder. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 7:53 a.m. A potent full moon is building up and will culminate May 15. The Leo moon forms harmonious contacts to Pluto, Venus and Saturn until 11:13 p.m., when it becomes inactive.

SATURDAY, MAY 10

The moon enters Virgo at 4:31 a.m., traveling there throughout the weekend. The sign Virgo is ruled by the planet Mercury. Therefore, there may be incidents of mechanical breakdown or electrical failure. Allow extra time for unexpected delays. In addition, Mercury prepares to form stressful 90-degree alignments to Neptune and Mars. Take it slow and easy. Spend time alone; pursue favorite leisure activities.

SUNDAY, MAY 11

Yesterday's planetary influences affect today as well. A lunar alignment to Pluto, in effect between 11:53 a.m.-2:53 p.m., warns you to think before you speak. Compliments will work better than criticism. Renew your spirit through time spent listening to music, meditating, enjoying nature, creating art. Open your heart to higher visions.

MONDAY, MAY 12

It can be difficult to get back to work or school today. People may be careless, sleepy, forgetful. Stop, look and listen. The Virgo moon aligns with Saturn at 3:09 a.m. and becomes inactive. A Libra moon takes over at 7:42 a.m. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury to Neptune, however, takes center stage. It is best to avoid any kind of negotiations or business dealings. Put off jobs that are tedious and demand mental precision. On the other hand, you can be successful developing projects that require your creativity and imagination.

TUESDAY, MAY 13

The next few days will be action-packed. Take it slow and easy. This is not a time to make major decisions or sign important contracts. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Mars may spark irritability, debates, fast driving. Don't take risks. A Libra moon is a major plus in today's planetary setup, because Libra promotes harmony and balance. In addition, Venus prepares to form a flowing 60-degree contact to stable Saturn. Let go of situations that are out of your control. Bring more beauty into your life or the life of another.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 14

At 4:13 a.m. the Libra moon becomes inactive until 8:14 a.m., when it enters Scorpio. All full moon warnings are in effect. Take it slow and easy. Eat light foods; avoid stimulants. Keep your hands and mind busy with practical projects. Mars and Neptune conjoin today; Neptune prepares to begin retrograde travel tomorrow. That means that things may not be as they appear. Separating the facts from the fiction can be difficult. Instead of numbing out through the path of least resistance, do some serious soul-searching. Let go of recent hurts or traumas. Take responsibility for your life and choices. You can achieve breakthroughs and turn your life around.

THURSDAY, MAY 15

People often have difficulty sleeping in full moon periods. As a result, they can be grouchy and difficult to get along with. This is one of those mornings. A powerful full moon culminates at 11:36 p.m. There are three factors that add to the intensity of this full moon: It is accompanied by a lunar eclipse. It is in perigee, meaning it's closest to the earth, and it culminates at 25-degrees Scorpio. In addition, Neptune, standing at 13-degrees Aquarius, begins retrograde travel. Spend time alone; strive for greater spiritual vision.

FRIDAY, MAY 16

After the barrage of planetary activity in the last few days, influences begin to ease. The moon enters cheerful Sagittarius at 7:43 a.m. However, a 90-degree alignment to Uranus occurs at 11:53 a.m. Avoid rigid time schedules; have an alternate plan of action in case things don't work out this morning. The planet Venus moves into Taurus at 6:58 a.m., remaining there until June 9. Take advantage of relatively calm astrological influences this afternoon and evening. Kick back, relax and recharge your batteries.

ZBA has packed agenda

3 controversial properties on are the docket

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Three controversial properties will go before the Zoning Board on Monday night seeking zoning relief: 3 Jerusalem Lane, 44 Border Street (the Olde Salt House), and 226 Chief Justice Highway.

The Zoning Board meeting will begin at 7 p.m. to try to accommodate the enormous agenda, which includes decisions on four properties and hearings on another 16 properties.

At the last hearing on 3 Jerusalem Lane on March 17, four hours of testimony from both sides resulted in no new decisions. More than 50 people packed the overflowing Selectmen's meeting room as lawyers for both sides argued why the mansion owned by

Is town's only state-subsidized housing project

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Everyone agrees Cohasset doesn't have enough affordable housing. However, it does have some — 64 units to be exact — in the Harborview Apartments at 60 Elm St. behind the police-fire station.

Just like other state programs, the 28-year-old state-subsidized apartment complex that is run by the Cohasset Housing Authority has been hit with cutbacks to its budget, thanks to the $3 billion state deficit. The CHA also administers 12 units of special needs housing at 72, 74 and 76 Elm St.

So housing authority director Marilyn Le Blanc is putting the word out that donated services and items would be very much appreciated and could do a lot to enhance the quality of life for the residents in the wood-frame, shingled complex.

To that end, Harborview is conducting a cleanup day from 10 a.m.-noon on Saturday. Le Blanc is even enlisting her grandchildren to come and help, as are many of the residents. Some good strong men, however, are needed to yank old vines from the walkway at the entrance to the main building.

Some of what is needed is a direct result of budget reductions, but even in better fiscal times, Harborview could use a little help.

"We are certainly not into extravagance here; we're talking about asking people to help us in many ways," Le Blanc says.

Case in point is the sign at the entrance to the complex off Elm Street that needs refurbishing or replacement. The residents, whose apartments are only 400 square feet, would also enjoy having a

Finance is talk of town forum

Officials debate ways to cut costs, generate revenue

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

More than 50 elected and appointed town officials debated new ways to cut costs and generate revenue for the town at a forum held Tuesday night at the Lightkeeper's Residence.

The meeting was arranged by the Board of Selectmen and was originally intended to cover a wide range of town issues. But the state of the town's operating budget became the topic of choice for the two-hour meeting. In the end, town officials agreed to have the Advisory Committee review the budget for potential savings and examine different ways of enhancing revenue.

The forum began with some town officials calling for reducing the annual raises in the salaries of town employees. "We have to ask everybody to share in the solution to the problem – which is to keep everybody in the payroll," said School Committee member Chartis Tebbetts. "I don't see any other way we can cope with the problem."

Sewer Commissioner Ray Kasperowicz called for a reexamination of all town contracts. "My guess is that the cost of living adjustments might be higher than what they should be," he said. "Over the years, you slip in a half percent there, a quarter percent there. It adds up, and then you can't handle it."

While teacher contracts are still two years away from new negotiations, all municipal contracts are up for negotiation later this year. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town would survey surrounding towns before the contracts were discussed.

But Planning Board member Bob Sturdy questioned that approach, saying that it in corporate America, it only creates a balloon effect. "All (the companies) are doing is looking at people who look at them, and the pay scale is getting out of hand," Sturdy said.

"Our taxes are going to have to go up. We can't squeeze water out of this brick."
— Al Moore,
Planning Board

Selectman Tom Callahan said the town may need to negotiate shorter contracts with its employees, in place of the three-year contracts it has now. "There's no flexibility, when we're tied into these longer contracts, to deal with a year like this," he said. "Just following what other towns and other unions do isn't going to solve the problem."

When it came to the schools, some officials suggested instituting retirement incentives for teachers and reducing their annual raises so that salaries would not increase 12 to 15 percent over three years, as they do

Stage set for Relay For Life

All-night walkathon raises funds for ACS

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

This weekend, the American Cancer Society's signature fundraising event, the Relay for Life, is coming to Cohasset for the seventh consecutive year.

The all-night walkathon, held at the track at Cohasset Middle High School, will begin Friday afternoon at 3 p.m. and last until noon on Saturday. Organizers expect as many as 600 walkers to participate and raise more than $140,000 to help find a cure for cancer.

Last year, relays in some 3,300 communities nationwide raised more than $245 million for the American Cancer Society. In Cohasset alone, despite a torrential downpour, about $140,000 was raised by some 600 walkers. Fifty-five local cancer survivors were honored, and 30 different teams participated.

Teams and individuals who participate in the relay arrange for sponsorship, and prizes are awarded to the highest fundraising individual, the top fundraising team, the most spirited team and the best decorated campsite.

Event chair Laurie Greenip said the Relay For Life is not only important because of the money it raises, but also because of the hope it gives to those who have cancer, those who have survived it and those who know someone who has suffered or died from the disease.

"It's a very positive message that we're still fighting cancer and hopefully within our lifetime we'll have a cure," she said.

According to those who have attended the event in the past, highlights of the Relay for Life include the Survivors' Lap and the Luminaria Ceremony. The Survivors' Lap begins at 6 p.m. on Friday and coincides with the Opening Ceremony. The Luminaria Ceremony begins at 9 p.m.

Event organizers say the Luminaria Ceremony is by far the most powerful and emotional part of the relay. Candles and bags are purchased in exchange for a $5 donation. Participants can write the names of loved ones who have fought cancer on the bags, which are then arranged alphabetically around the high school track.

As the sun sets on Friday night, participants will light the candles while they circle the track. At 9 p.m., a moment of silence will be held, and then a bagpiper will lead everyone in a procession.

> — Laurie Greenip, chairman

Greenip said organizers have also added a number of fun games to the this year's event to make it more of a family atmosphere and to encourage teams to stick together.

Those games include a Frisbee throwing contest, face painting, a hula hoop contest, kite making, a twister contest and a scavenger hunt. Also, teams will compete in a Halloween fashion show, but are only allowed to use limited materials to make their costumes. Meanwhile, a live performances from guitarist Ray Papile and music from DJ Dave Antune will keep participants walking to the beat.

"We really want the teams to stay as a team instead of one person coming and then leaving," Greenip said. "We're trying to mix it up a bit."

On Saturday, as the relay comes to a close, children will get a chance to demonstrate their newly-made kites. Meanwhile, H.P. Hood Co. will be handing out free ice cream samples.

"This is a very positive, uplifting, family-oriented event, so I would encourage people to come out," Greenip said.

She said individuals looking to participate can still join an existing team if they arrive at about 3 p.m. on Friday. She especially encouraged cancer survivors to come to the event and take part in the Survivors' Lap.

Greenip said the forecast may call for some light showers on Friday, but that won't delay the event. Last year, the event was called off half-way through due to torrential downpour. "Even in that horrible rainstorm last year, we had people out there," Greenip said.

Greenip said Luminaria bags would be available until about 8 p.m. on Friday. Also, she said, "it's never too late to make a donation" to the American Cancer Society, either at the Relay for Life or by sending a check directly to the organization.

Cohasset treatment plant, reservoir celebrate milestone

Water dept. holds ceremony on Aaron River Dam

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

More than 50 people gathered on the Aaron River Dam on Sunday as the Cohasset Water Department celebrated the 25th anniversary of the Aaron River Reservoir and the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant.

The event was held around a new "Aaron River Reservoir" stone monument located on the shore of the reservoir near Aaron River Road.

Water Commission Chairman John McNabb said the treatment plant and reservoir, which were completed in 1978 and together cost more than $3.7 million, increased the Cohasset water system's maximum capacity from 600,000 gallons per day to 3.5 million gallons per day.

"This brought Cohasset into a new era. On May 11, 1978, we changed from a water-poor town to a water-rich town," said McNabb. "Before May 11, 1978, Cohasset had endured frequent water shortages and summer water bans because the capacity of the water system was unable to meet the growing demand. Because Lily Pond was our major source of water then, the pond would often almost dry up every summer because of the amount of water drawn out of it."

McNabb said the town now uses an average of 710,000 gallons of water per day. The maximum daily demand, set last August, was 2.2 million gallons. But even then, McNabb said, the reservoir did not get below 78 percent capacity.

"Cohasset now has a water supply that is the envy of other towns in New England," he said.

McNabb noted that the water level in the reservoir was above what is considered 100 percent capacity, meaning that the body now holds more than 323 million gallons of water. That's far more than the 200 million gallons that the town uses on average each year.

"Projections show that we still have excess capacity for decades to come," McNabb said. "It was fortuitous that these projects were designed for a projected Cohasset population of 10,000 in1985 and 12,000 in 2010, because they will now be able to provide valuable service to the town well beyond their design period of fifty years."

McNabb thanked town officials, water department employees, and past and present water commissioners for their support and contributions to the reservoir and treatment plant project, which took almost 15 years to complete, from 1964 to 1978, although only two years to construct.

Edwin Pratt, who was the superintendent of the Water Department from 1967 to 1981, spoke after McNabb about the details of the planning and construction of the dam and treatment plant. "This, at the time, was the largest public works project the town had ever undertaken," he said.

Pratt recalled how he traveled to Washington, D.C. to secure funding for the project with the late Alan Murphy, then Chairman of the Water Commission. "We met with almost every politician down there," he said.

Pratt and Murphy were able to obtain a $994,000 federal grant from the Department of Federal Housing and Urban Development. The remainder of the project was funded by $2.5 million in loans from the Farmers' Home Administration and $206,000 that was appropriated by the Town.

Pratt said 150 acres were cleared to make way for the reservoir. He described how the Aaron River was diverted so the 900-foot-long dam could be constructed, and the impermeable material needed to build the dam was concocted using a mix of soils dredged on the site.

"All the material to build the dam was from right here," Pratt said. "No material was brought in from any other place."

Pratt said three weeks after the dam was completed and its gates were closed, the reservoir was full. "It was absolutely unexpected," he said.

"Cohasset now has a water supply that is the envy of other towns in New England."
— John McNabb, Water Commission

Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, presented a Senate Proclamation to the Water Commissioners to commemorate the anniversary. He recalled how when was a student at Hingham High School in 1978, he visited the reservoir while under construction as part of his field study for an environmental science class.

A representative for Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, who could not attend, gave a proclamation from the House of Representatives, and Selectman Merle Brown presented one on behalf of the Board of Selectmen.

Water Commissioner Robert Kasameyer then announced last week the Cohasset Water Department received a 2003 public water system award from the state's Department of Environmental Protection for having one of the best water systems in Massachusetts.

Kasameyer, McNabb, and fellow Water Commissioner Glenn Pratt then presented commemorative plaques to town officials, town employees, and water department employees who had worked on the reservoir and treatment plant project.

But those who didn't receive a plaque did not leave empty-handed. The Water Commissioners made available plenty of souvenir 16.9 ounce bottles of water, taken directly from the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant. Attendees were encourage to take a case home. More of the commemorative bottles are still available at the plant.

Selectman Merle Brown shares some anecdotes with the crowd about the history of the site, before it was transformed into a reservoir.

Stickers for sale

The expiration date of the Beach and Recycling Transfer Facility permits is June 30. The "all-facility" sticker for the next fiscal year will be on sale starting in June during normal business hours at the Cohasset Town Hall and at the DPW Garage on weekends starting June 1 from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.; and on Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

An "all-facilities" sticker will be $30; for a second motor vehicle, it's $30; and for seniors, it's $15. This sticker will allow access to the Recycling Transfer Facility, to Sandy Beach, as well as parking at all areas in town that require a sticker. Separate beach stickers will no longer be available.

In addition, residents are required to purchase special bags in which to dispose all trash that cannot be recycled. These bags will be offered at various locations throughout the town. You are encouraged to purchase your sticker through the mail by providing a copy of your current registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Phil and Mary Anne Ayer should or shouldn't be granted a special permit. Definitions of terms in the town's bylaw such as "neighborhood" and "detrimental" were called into question. Appraisers and other experts gave professional opinions.

The Ayers were told on Jan. 16 by the Zoning Board to stop work on their home — nearly 80 percent complete at that point — after it was determined building inspector Bob Egan erred in issuing them a building permit. Neighbors had fought to stop construction on the property since August of 2002, but their requests were denied by Egan, who stuck to what he thought was a widely-held, longstanding interpretation of the zoning bylaws.

The neighbors then appealed the matter to the Zoning Board, which found the bylaws had been wrongly interpreted. The Ayers' lot was non-conforming, the board said, so they should have applied for a special permit, unless they had planned to stick within the exterior dimensions of the pre-existing home, a 2,000 square foot ranch.

The Ayers' lawyers, Roberta Sawyer and Martin Healy, still maintain that 3 Jerusalem Lane does not need zoning relief and are prepared to argue that in Superior Court. However, Sawyer and Healy have also said that if the Zoning Board must decide on issuing the property a special permit, it should not use esthetic qualities to determine if the house is "substantially more detrimental to the neighborhood."

The lawyer for the neighbors, Mark DeGiacomo, has argued that the new home has a serious financial impact on the value of the surrounding homes. He has asked that the house be torn down and replaced with a home of dimensions similar to the pre-existing ranch.

Sawyer has asked the Zoning Board to require six other properties in Cohasset to apply for special permits as well, since they apparently have been built in violation of the same bylaw as 3 Jerusalem Lane. The Zoning Board, however, has questioned whether the Ayers have the standing to make such a request. The board will continue this matter at Monday's hearing, too.

Olde Salt House

A plan to expand parking at the Olde Salt House at 44 Border Street is also on the docket for Monday.

The plan calls for a valet parking system and essentially creates large parking grids at Cohasset Harbor Inn (Kimball's) and its off-street parking lot on Elm Street. The Inn, the Olde Salt House and Atlantica are all owned by Peter Roy, a Cohasset resident.

The additional parking — 42 spaces — would allow the Olde Salt House to expand its occupancy from 52 to 99 patrons. Technically, it provides 20 spaces more than required for the expansion.

The parking plan is before the Zoning Board because it would require a variance. Two of the plan's components — the use of valet parking and the use of off-street parking that is more than 500 feet from the establishment — are not allowed within the bylaws.

On April 22, at the initial hearing on the matter, neighbors of the restaurant turned out in force to voice opposition to the plan, saying it would only increase traffic and congestion around the harbor.

Charles Humphreys, a lawyer for the restaurant, told the Zoning Board the additional parking was needed to allow Atlantica and the Olde Salt House to sustain their business during peak summer hours. According to the bylaws, to be granted a variance, the Olde Salt House must prove it suffers a hardship. Humphreys said the hardship was that the restaurant needed to be able to do the majority of its business in the summer, something that was prevented by the lack of parking in the harbor area. Neighbors, however, argued that a business can not claim a hardship simply because it is not making as much money as its owners would like.

226 CJC Highway

Owner Joseph Rosano wants to build a mixed-use, two-story building on his land at 226 Chief Justice Cushing Highway. The building would be home to office space on the first floor and two, one-bedroom apartments on the second floor.

The problem is that Rosano's land is zoned residential. Its current use — for storage of sand, mulch, stone, bricks and other earth and construction materials — is allowed only because that use predates the institution of zoning in Cohasset in the 1950s.

Rosano's lawyer, Maureen Hurley, told the Zoning Board on April 22 that her client needs only a special permit to change the current use. The Zoning Board, however, disagreed, saying that such a change would require a use variance, which the Zoning Board was prohibited from issuing by Town Meeting in 2001.

The difference in interpretation revolves around how a crucial sentence in the town bylaws in read. Hurley said that at the upcoming meeting, she will provide case law to back up her interpretation, which is essentially that Rosano needs only to show that the new use of the property would be substantially less detrimental to the surrounding community than the existing use.

Rosano said his plan for development is different than that which he presented to the Zoning Board in 2000, when he asked for a series of variances for the property. That plan included reserving several parking spaces so that Rosano could display luxury used cars that he planned to recondition for sale. Rosano said his current plan omitted that request. He also said the two-story building would be a replica of a Cohasset home on the National Register of Historic Places.

Finance is talk of town forum

now.

But Superintendent Ed Malvey told officials that retirement incentives had been offered in the past but teachers had not jumped at them. He also said that Cohasset was only just above the state average in teacher pay. He said step raises – which some town officials had questioned – are standard in most, if not all, of the state's public schools.

Malvey cautioned that the collective bargaining process could stand to get ugly if the town requests too much. He said the last time he saw a town try to reduce the percentage of teacher health insurance it covered, as Haddad is trying to do now, the teachers spent two years fighting the issue before the Labor Relations Committee.

School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo, who was involved with the negotiations of the current teachers' contract, said all the ideas that he heard at the forum had come up before during past teacher contract negotiations. "We always balance the fiscal responsibility with what we believe is a very serious requirement of the town, which is to have top schools," he said.

When the discussion turned towards generating more revenue, Town Counsel Paul DeRensis noted how in other towns he had seen revenue enhancement committees come up with ideas, including allowing cell phone towers, providing early retirement incentives, selling small parcels of town land and raising municipal fees.

Officials discussed "regionalizing," or sharing services with other towns, but Haddad noted that the town already shares its ambulance service with surrounding towns. Similarly, Board of Health Chairman Steve Bobo noted that the health agent position will be shared with another town next year.

Selectman Merle Brown suggested looking into more co-ops — like the recycling co-op — because they are not necessarily as binding as other partnerships.

Selectman Michael Sullivan encouraged everyone to reach out to their friends to find out what other communities were doing to deal with their fiscal situations.

Planning Board member Al Moore was not as optimistic that new revenue or cost savings would solve the town's problems. "Our taxes are going to have to go up. We can't squeeze water out of this brick," he said. "I think if you look around the country at other affluent communities and you look at their tax rates, we're getting a bargain in this community."

Town officials decided that rather than form a new committee, the Advisory Committee should examine the budget for more potential savings and new ways of generating revenue. Chairman Maureen Jerz said the committee would also look at how to "mitigate tax increases for people who can't afford it."

Brown said the Selectmen would schedule another forum sometime within the next four months to discuss other issues facing the town.

Other forum highlights

• Planning Board member Bob Sturdy suggested offering pay raises to teachers based on quality of performance. Former School Committee member Maureen Jerz said that method had been explored in the past. "I think six years ago we put that issue on the table, and you would have thought Rome was burning," said Jerz.

• Growth and Development Committee Chairman Rick Swanborg suggested raising mooring fees since they are relatively low compared to moorings rented by private companies. Town Manager Mark Haddad pointed out that Cohasset charges more for its public moorings than any other town on the South Shore. However, Haddad said, unlike some nearby towns, Cohasset does not generate any revenue from slips.

• Sewer Commissioner Ray Kasperowicz suggested looking at different, cheaper ways to manage the Fire Department, but Town Manager Mark Haddad said that could jeopardize the mutual aid Cohasset receives from surrounding towns. Haddad said mutual aid is even more valuable now because recently hired firefighters do not make enough to live in town, so they take longer to get to the station in the event of an emergency call.

Avalon hearing is postponed

The Zoning Board of Appeals has postponed its next meeting with Avalon Bay Estates after the developer requested an extension on a hearing that was originally scheduled for May 20.

Avalon Bay seeks a comprehensive permit under chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, to build a 200-unit apartment complex on Route 3A.

A lawyer for Avalon Bay did not state a reason for the extension request in a letter to the Zoning Board.

Zoning Board member Barbara Power said Avalon Bay did not provide the board with a reason for the extension either, but the board did not request one. "They don't have their act together," said Power. "We can understand that."

Avalon Bay requested that the hearing be postponed for two to three weeks, but Power said it may have to wait longer than that as several members of the Zoning Board have scheduled vacations in the upcoming months.

The next Avalon meeting will be significant because Avalon Bay may propose an alternative to its current wastewater plan, which the Water Commission says will pollute the town's supply of drinking water.

If Avalon Bay does not come up with an alternative, it will need to stick with the current plan, which Avalon representatives say will release treated wastewater into the Weir River watershed, not the Lily Pond watershed.

The Board of Selectmen and the School Committee are also prepared to make statements about Avalon's proposed development at the next Zoning Board hearing.

Habitat for Humanity condominium for sale

Organization to begin accepting applications soon

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

South Shore Habitat for Humanity, a nonprofit organization that provides affordable housing for local families, is selling a condominium unit in its dwelling at 43 Elm St.

The unit was resold to Habitat by the previous owner, Lynda Kearns, who purchased it after it was renovated by Habitat in 1993. When selling homes or condominiums, Habitat provides100 percent zero-interest mortgages for 20 years to qualified individuals, who must then give Habitat the first right of refusal to buy back the home at cost.

The dwelling at 43 Elm St. consists of two condos. Formerly known as the Bates House, it was previously owned by the Town and served as the headquarters for the Rotary Club.

At Town Meeting in 1992, residents voted to sell the building to Habitat for $1. After renovating the home, Habitat sold the two units—one of them to Kearns—for about $50,000 each.

Now that Kearns has left, Habitat is planning to host meetings for interested potential owners who must then submit applications. Candidates for Habitat must demonstrate a significant need for housing, be willing to do 500 hours of "sweat equity" work for Habitat and be financially qualified but with limited income. A family or individual must have a minimum household income of $23,000 and a maximum of $39,000, which varies depending on the size of the family.

The Elm Street unit will be sold for $69,500. Since the unit is in good condition and does not need work, Habitat will arrange for the next owner to do "sweat equity" work on new Habitat projects in either Marshfield, Easton, or Norwell.

Habitat for Humanity is a worldwide organization that was founded by President Jimmy Carter.

South Shore Habitat gives 10 percent of its revenue to the parent organization to fund the construction of housing in El Salvador. The remainder of the revenue goes towards developing new Habitat properties on the South Shore. South Shore Habitat currently has 25 properties that house more than 30 families.

John Seavey, Chairman of Habitat's Family Selection Committee, said he is still setting up times and places for interviews where Habitat will make applications available to interested buyers. Seavey noted that this was the first time Habitat has turned over a property on the South Shore to a new owner.

piano in the community room where they gather for special events and meetings.

The complex includes 64 apartments (including four units that can accommodate the handicapped) for those who are at least 60 years of age with an annual income not in excess of $40,600. Residents pay 30 percent of their net income including utilities to live there, and the average rent at Harborview is about $300 a month, Le Blanc says. There are also 12 units for the developmentally disabled.

The waiting list for an apartment can be as long as three years. A recent news brief in the Mariner about a few vacancies drew about 45 inquiries in a matter of days. With the loss of several residents, the waiting list had dwindled to just two; it's now up to 31 applicants, according to the CHA annual report.

Le Blanc says maintenance of the complex will be more difficult because of budget reductions.

"Our operating budget has been reduced by 25 percent," she says. "Our budget is lower than it was two years ago.

Residents could also have to pay more rent — numbers that may seem small to those who are not on fixed incomes.

Under the governor's budget proposal, for example, those with incomes of $5,000 a year will pay about $8 more a month, and those with incomes of $30,000 will pay $138 more a month, according to a newsletter from the Mass. Chapter of the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials.

"You should see the grimace on a person's face when they see their rent is going up," Le Blanc says.

Each apartment includes a small kitchen, bathroom, living room, and a bedroom. There are movable dividers so residents can change the size of the living and bedroom areas. One resident created a studio apartment, for example. There is only one couple in the 64 units, the rest are single people.

In addition to Le Blanc, the CHA also employs a maintenance supervisor. The CHA, which is a state-subsidized property management agency, has a five-member board of commissioners four of whom are elected. The remaining seat is appointed by the governor.

Although the town DPW pitches in, Harborview could use more help maintaining the grounds, including helping residents rake and maintain their gardens. Many residents love gardening but no longer have the mobility. Help could also be used in washing windows and light carpentry, such as installing shelves; painting help is always needed. After snowstorms, help digging out residents' cars is needed. The oval island could also use a beautification effort.

LeBlanc says a truck to move things is also on the wish list, as well as a small van to transport residents. Some, who are in their 90s, need to be transported from their apartments to the community room for events and programs.

Residents with macular degeneration (eye disease) would enjoy being read to, she says

The Cohasset Housing Authority is so small, it doesn't qualify for a full-time service coordinator, who would not only conduct recreational activities but would provide help with health insurance and legal issues. So anyone who could volunteer to provide guidance in those areas would be welcome.

Harborview is grateful to those residents and groups that have helped out including scout troops and CCD classes; the Osgood PTO, the American Legion and Cohasset Rotary – to name a few. The Harborview Tenants Association meets monthly and conducts surveys to ascertain residents' needs. The group also plans social activities and keeps in contact with residents who are ill or need cheering up, Le Blanc says.

For more information, call the housing authority office at 781-383-1948, or stop by the office at 60 Elm St., from 9 a.m.-4 p.m., Monday through Wednesday.

Cohasset's Relay For Life weekend is a true family event

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

MOMS ARE THE BEST

I want to start out this week's column with a big wish and hope that all mothers everywhere were pampered, loved and spoiled this past Sunday on Mothers Day. I cannot believe I forgot to send out a special message last week but sometimes, being a mom just gets in the way of all logical thinking! Sorry about that.

DEAN'S LIST

Named to the dean's list for the winter quarter at Northeastern University are Cohasset residents Elizabeth J. Farnham and Andrei Skorupa. Elizabeth is majoring in criminal justice and Andrei is an engineering major. Fantastic work to both of you and keep up the hard work.

RELAY WEEKEND!

This Friday and Saturday is the Relay For Life to benefit the American Cancer Society and everyone should really try to come to Cohasset High's Alumni Field to be a part of this amazing event. Starting at 3 p.m. on Friday afternoon, people will be walking around the track, taking part in games and activities, several fund-raisers being held in tents and outside of the track, The Relay for Life store will be open and so much more. It truly is a family oriented event that you have to see and be a part of to understand how much it really means.

The Survivor Lap, held at 6 p.m. on Friday is a sight to behold and later in the evening, the Luminaria candles will be lit at 9 p.m. in memory of a loved one, to honor a survivor or to send a prayer or special wish out to someone who is currently battling this dreaded disease. So make sure to come take part in this event, bring your family, cash and hearts, it is so worth it. Also, the "Taste Of Relay" will be happening that evening as well with lots of yummy foods from several area restaurants to taste and enjoy for $7 per person.

AT ANNAPOLIS

Allison Berg, daughter of Peter and Miki Berg, is on active duty at the United States Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md. She is just finishing up her 2nd class year(junior year in college). As of May 23, 2003, she will be a "firstie" (senior)and her battalion honor representative. She is majoring in Honors Oceanography with a minor in French. As part of her training, this summer she will be studying French in Paris for a month, then spend the next month on a cruise with the French Naval Academy. After that, she will be training the "detailers", who train the "plebes" for Plebe Summer at the academy. She's doing extremely well and is obviously a busy young woman!

A BIG THANK YOU

The Cohasset Youth Baseball & Softball League would like to thank all of its players, parents, friends and families for making the calendar card fundraiser a big success!. The daily drawings will begin on May 15 with the winning names being posted at Barnes field every night! Good luck! The CHS Diamond Club would like to thank George Roukounakis, owner of the village's Olympic Citco, for his continued generosity to CHS baseball. George supports the J.V. and varsity baseball teams by allowing them to wash cars at his gas station. So, as sparkling cars drive by, thank George, a gem of a guy!

CUT-A-THON BENEFITS ACS

The Adrian Morris Salon is hosting a 7 hour Cut-a-Thon on Sunday, May 18 from 10a.m.-5p.m. Walk in service only, no appointment is necessary. For only $20 an Adrian Morris stylist will shampoo and cut your hair and all of the proceeds will be donated to the American Cancer Society in conjunction with the Cohasset Relay for Life. Cash and checks only please. Please make any checks out directly to the American Cancer Society. This will be a great day so please come and support this worthwhile cause!

GEM OF A TENT

Elizabeth Kissick of EK designs will be setting up a Farmers Market-style table, hosted by the Life Stridesteam, co-captained by Kellie Gaumer and Oriana Sadler from 5-9p.m. on Friday May 16 at the Relay For Life. All of the proceeds from her jewelry sales during this time will be donated to the American Cancer Society. Please make sure to stop by their tent to look and purchase some beautiful pieces of jewelry.

NEW SCOREBOARD

When you see Dave Curry and Kevin Dooley around town please extend a thank you for their efforts in placing a new baseball scoreboard at Milliken field recently. The big blue scoreboard is another step in the rebirth of Cohasset's Middle and Senior High School baseball programs. Dave, is the owner of Curry Woodworking in Avon , provided all the material and labor to build the scoreboard, while Kevin, President of Bay State Equipment in Quincy, donated the necessary equipment to install the scoreboard.

FELICITACIONES!

The South Shore Charter School announces several Spanish students are receiving national recognition through The United States Achievement Academy. Alex Gilman of Cohasset is among the students honored and has been officially nominated as an USAA International Foreign Language Awards winner. His outstanding commitment to academic excellence has resulted in the nomination for this national award. The nominees will have their personal biography published in the appropriate volume of the USAA National Awards yearbook. In addition, they are eligible for one of the 200 scholarships cash grants. The Academy has granted more than $780,000 in scholarship cash grants to USAA National Award winners. Alex, this nomination is a wonderful recognition to you and all of your hard work. Congratulations!

Deer Hill students Hanna Burgess, Matti Atholtz and Callie Altholz are all smiles as they participate in last year's Relay For Life event on Alumni Field.

POPS VOLUNTEERS

The Cohasset Arts Boosters are looking for some help with POPS night at the High School. This fun and rewarding evening will be on Tuesday, May 20, at 7 p.m. The Cohasset Arts Boosters are looking for help with shopping before hand, setting up and helping the night of the event. If you can give us any time, please call Donna O'Donnell at 781-383-6113 or Stephanie Noble at 781-383-6278.

SWIMMING NEWS

The Cohasset Swim Center is looking forward to the 2003 Swim Season! A town-wide mailing has been completed. Additional newsletter/registration forms can be found at the Town Hall and at the Paul Pratt Library. Just a friendly reminder that the Red Cross Swimming Lessons registration deadline is May 23. So get out your suits and snorkels, grab a towel and get ready for some splish-splashing fun! The Cohasset Swim and Dive Team is still looking for assistant coaches. Please call Susan Donahue at 781-383-0865. Registration for existing Cohasset Swim and Dive team members will be held at the Cohasset Town Hall on May 17 from 9 a.m.-noon. This is a one time sign up registration so make sure to mark it on your calendar.

PARENT FORUM

Attention all interested parents and members of the community. School Superintendent Dr. Malvey and the School Committee will hold an open forum to discuss the third grade move to the Deer Hill and the sixth grade move to the Middle School on Thursday, May 22 at 7 p.m. in the Deer Hill Cafeteria. Now is the time to come forward with any questions, thoughts, concerns or ideas that you may have on how to make this transition a smooth one.

CONSIGNMENT SHOP RAFFLE

The Cohasset Consignment Shop is holding a raffle for the month of May in honor of its 50th Anniversary, not birthday as I mentioned last week! To enter, fill out a coupon which can be found at the consignment shop, Cohasset Nobles Camera Shop, The Village Greenery and in Scituate, at the Bloomin' Place. The drawings are being held on Fridays, May 16 and 23 at 1 p.m. The prize for each week is a delightful gardening basket filled with gifts and certificates from local nurseries and hardware stores.

No purchase is necessary so make sure to enter this wonderful and fun raffle.

That is all for this week. Send all your news and information to me in one of the following ways by noon on Mondays.

Lending a helping hand to Honduran elementary school

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Students from Cohasset Middle School have teamed up with first-year teacher Rachael Brewin to provide much-needed supplies to an elementary school in Honduras.

After seventh and eight graders spent more than a month donating items like crayons, tape, glue sticks, rulers and computer games, Brewin hand-delivered the supplies over April vacation to the Cofradia Bilingual School, a small private school located in the rural town of Cofradia, Honduras.

When she returned, Brewin created a slideshow documenting her trip. She selected from among the more than 500 photos that she took during her travels, while students helped her choose music for the soundtrack.

Brewin said she was inspired to carry out the charitable project because her good friend and classmate from Wheelock College, Catie Solan, is one of six volunteer teachers at the Cofradia Bilingual School. The school is host to more than 80 students from kindergarten through sixth grade. It is ran by the non-profit organization B.E.C.A., or Bilingual Education for Central America.

"In Honduras, if you don't know English, you don't have as many chances to get a job," explained Brewin. "But if you know English, your salary basically doubles."

Brewin said Solan informed her of the tough conditions at the Cofradia Bilingual School, where students pay $30 per month for school, although many receive financial aid or have a full scholarship. The school's library includes only five shelves of books, which is more than Cofradia's public library, Brewin said. Also, she said, teachers need to make a trip to the local fire station for clean water.

In February, Brewin approached the Middle School Student Council about her idea to gather supplies for the school. The students took the idea and ran with it, reading letters and showing pictures sent by Cofradia students and making announcements to update students on how much had been collected. Students also posted creative signs to encourage donations.

"The students really did everything about getting the word out," Brewin said. "For a while, I didn't even have to do anything. I just sat back and watched it miraculously come together."

Students show Brewin the plants they are growing in agriculture class.

Ian Cundall, a Student Council class representative for the seventh grade, said the decision to help Brewin was an easy one. "We just all thought it was a good thing to do, and it was a unanimous decision," he said.

Tessa Leahy, an eighth grader at the Middle School who was one of a number of students who posted flyers to encourage donations, said she was inspired by the charitable nature of the project.

"(The students at Cofradia Bilingual School) have such poor living conditions and they don't have as many opportunities as us," she said. "I think after graduation I'd like to go live somewhere and volunteer like that. I think it would be fun."

When Brewin, who is a special education teacher, made the trip to Honduras in April with her father and a family friend, she carried with her what she estimated to be about 300 pounds of school supplies – everything from stickers and glitter to sponges and educational computer games. Brewin said the supplies valued more than $1000.

"When I was leaving school with all the supplies for vacation, my car was full," she said. "I couldn't fit anything else in."

Brewin said the teachers, students and parents at Cofradia Bilingual School were "ecstatic" to finally receive the donations and provided their generous hospitality in return. "They were so kind to us," she said. "One of the mothers made dinner for 30 people."

During her nine-day stay in Honduras, Brewin saw firsthand how the Cofradia School functioned. She participated in classes, one of which was an course in agriculture. Using money that was donated by the families of Cohasset students, she took Cofradia students on a field trip to an art museum in the Honduran capital of San Pedro Sula.

Brewin said the donated supplies would be rationed and would last the school for a few years. She said the slideshow presentation, which took place last Thursday morning, provided a sense of closure for Cohasset students by allowing them to see how their donations made a difference. She invited Solan, who had returned from Honduras on vacation, to field questions about the Cofradia Bilingual School.

Cohasset teacher Rachael Brewin is all smiles as she poses with Mary Nicole, a kindergarten student at Cofradia Bilingual School.

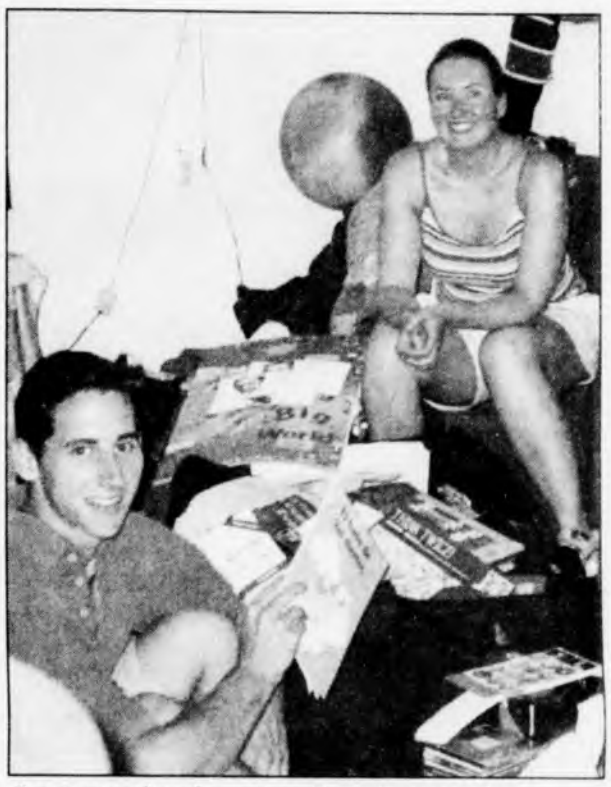
Cundall said the slideshow hit home with students who may not have fully understood what life at a rural school in Honduras was like.

"A lot of students didn't realize how bad the living conditions were until they saw the slideshow," he said. "You saw the little kids and you were like, 'Wow, look at the conditions they have to live with.'"

Brewin said since returning from Honduras she has received thank-you notes in English from the students at Cofradia Bilingual School, and she noticed remarkable improvement from the initial letters sent earlier this year.

Brewin said the project taught Cohasset students a valuable lesson. "It's important for students here to understand that we are very fortunate," she said. "A lot of what we have, we sometimes take for granted."

To make a donation to the Cofradia Bilingual School, send a check to B.E.C.A., 118 West 118th St., #4, New York City, NY 10026.



Brewin sorts through supplies with a volunteer teacher at Cofradia Bilingual School.

Local residents attend Juvenile Diabetes benefit

It was an evening of fun and glamour for the Cohasset residents who attended the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation's 21st Annual "Main Event Gala" held at the Boston Marriott Copley Place Saturday night. The event raised $1 million and the money will be used to support research directed at finding a cure for diabetes.

They and their friends are committed to helping find a cure for this disease.

There was a pre-party held at a private home in Cohasset before the gala and three couples in attendance have young children in Cohasset living with the daily struggles of juvenile diabetes. They and their friends are committed to helping find a cure for this disease.

The benefit in Boston was an enormous success and all donations will contribute to helping to finding a cure.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Elm Street housing

We've heard it called elderly housing and even jokingly described as "wrinkle village." But what it is — is truly affordable housing for those 60 and older on limited incomes.

Compare the "average" rent to what the AvalonBay project plans to charge for its affordable units and you quickly realize the 28-year-old Harborview apartment complex is a precious gem in a town that touts it cares about providing affordable housing for its senior citizens. Cohasset residents, who apply to live there, are given preference over other applicants.

But how many of us drive by the Harborview sign, which is in dire need of refurbishing, and don't really zero in on it, or even notice it? How many of us are even aware that Harborview exists? Tucked in on three acres behind the police-fire station, the complex is virtually invisible.

The 64-unit complex that also has an additional 12 units for the developmentally delayed is subsidized by the state — which means our tax dollars at the state level support the housing authority so it can provide housing for those with low incomes.

But with a $3 billion state deficit, the housing authority's budget is being cut which means it will be more stretched to provide maintenance at the complex.

However, even without with the budget issues, Harborview could use some assistance from the residents of Cohasset.

Help can range from donating a piano for the community room, installing shelves, beautifying the grounds — to spending an hour reading to an older person, who is losing his or her eyesight.

Housing authority director Marilyn Le Blanc is compiling a "wish list" that will be available during a cleanup planned for 10 a.m.-noon on Saturday.

In a town like Cohasset, there is no reason why Harborview should want for anything.

In this town, there are people with means and people with energy, and some have both. Let's get involved and spruce up Harborview.

Relay For Life

The annual Relay For Life sponsored by the American Cancer Society has become an annual tradition this time of year. Who among us hasn't been touched by cancer in some way? It's through events like the Relay For Life that money can be raised while those who are raising the funds can also feel the satisfaction — and the emotion — of making a difference.

If you are not on a team, there are still many ways to participate and enjoy the weekend events, all the while supporting a terrific cause.

We hope to see you at Alumni Field.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Response to letter from Peace Forum

TO THE EDITOR:

Thanks to the members of the South Shore Peace Forum for their letter to the Mariner. I appreciate their thoughtful addition to the foreign policy debate and respect their right — and even obligation — to publicly express their displeasure with the war in Iraq.

While agreeing with the Peace Forum's goals and objectives, I write in reaction to suggest that a different means is necessary to achieve a lasting and stable peace. I would like to commend President Bush and Prime Minister Blair for their courage and fortitude both in Iraq and vis-à-vis the UN. Unfortunately there are leaders and nations that do not dream of world peace — and who will put the security of the world's peace loving nations at risk in order to achieve their particular goals. Saddam Hussein has provided a long history of proof of his bad intentions; he has ruthlessly attacked and killed his own people, funded terrorists and suicide bombers to strike out at Western interests abroad, and conducted a covert dirty weapons program intended to ensure his position as a threat to his neighbors as to the West.

The means that the Peace Forum suggests to control such menaces — the UN — has seen its resolutions against Iraq disregarded with impunity, its processes dragged out and renegotiated to the point of impotence. The UN is powerless to enforce its resolutions as long as individual member states such as France (which overtly assisted in the process that enabled senior members of the Iraqi regime escape) and Russia (which continued to supply military equipment to Iraq during the recent conflict) callously deny their support for follow-up action. The reality is that the UN's hands are tied so long as any conflicts of interest exist among the veto-holding members of the Security Council.

President Bush and Prime Minister Blair have seen this paralysis, have assessed the threat, and have courageously committed military and economic resources in order to free the world of the threat of Saddam Hussein. Neither leader takes lightly war's threat to the well being of his nation's soldiers. Neither leader fails to appreciate the dedication of his volunteer military forces. And while the primary consideration was Saddam Hussein's threat to American and British security, any significant threat to two such peace and freedom loving nations must also be a threat to greater world peace. By proactively eliminating one of the world's major dangers, President Bush and Prime Minister Blair have broken the patterns of multinational inaction and convenience strikes that both enabled Saddam Hussein to maintain his evil regime and encouraged his imitators to rise up.

The Peace Forum suggests that our policy of proactive peacemaking can only be viewed as senseless and self-serving violence. As with all policies, there will be individuals and nations who disagree with our means. Further, there will always be individuals and nations who hate us for nothing more than being all that we cherish — freedom loving and democratic. To suggest that we can avoid future violence against the United States by continuing the very policy of inaction under which the extent of terrorist and rogue state threats have come to light is both illogical and irresponsible. Simply hoping that no one will hate us and no one will harm us is not likely to be more successful today than it was on September 10, 2001.

So I thank President Bush and Prime Minister Blair for having the courage to be the true peace-makers. They have made the very difficult choice to risk a few human lives to save many and they have seen initial victory. While reconstruction will be neither easy nor completely smooth, I would chose no other leaders to forge ahead in the historic endeavor of creating a lasting peace for Iraq.

HEALTH NOTES

Town turf and lawn-care practices

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Every spring, the issue of responsible lawn care comes up. Folks in town generally apply common sense as well as limited chemicals to their fiefdoms, but it only takes a few strategically placed applications of excessive chemicals and other practices to wreak considerable harm. But, is lawn care a public health issue?

With SARS, food contamination, allergic reactions to chemicals, and peanuts, latex, etc., should we really be worrying about what people put on their lawns? This has been a point of discussion at the Board for some time. In the last analysis, we go to Joe Godzik, our health officer, who shows great common sense and ask the question whether, in the face of all the other things calling for our oversight, should we really be using up time and resources on lawn care?

His answer, and the answer of so many environmental public servants is yes. As a nation, we have adopted some harmful paradigms which are having a negative effect on our general overall health. We all know about overweight and obesity the root causes for which are related to too much cheap food and too many incentives for inactivity. There may be other less harmful examples, but a consensus of health-care officials is that abuse of our environment is surely harming the health of some fraction of our population. I could mention the dead zone in the Gulf of Mexico, or the virus which is killing sea lions in California, or the fungus which is attacking our lobsters in Cohasset. All have loose and unconfirmed links to some aspect of our treatment of our surroundings.

Now, back to lawn care. What, if anything should we do about it? Well, in the first place we don't believe that passing laws is the way to attack most systemic problems. We far prefer education as an approach. Accordingly, Health Notes has an article every spring extolling integrated pest management or some other system of better handling our environment. However, the problem with using education to make changes is that everybody isn't educated.

Thankfully, I hear that a gratifying number of people read this column, but it's not going to reach enough people to be really effective in stamping out overuse of harmful agricultural chemicals in the face of the onslaught of advertising campaigns aimed at increasing their use. For this reason, most government agencies such as the EPA have included in their regulations much material about public outreach, getting peoples ear on matters such as pesticide control, storm-drain maintenance, and yes, turf management.

And so, following this thought, the Board has an idea. We are considering a novel and very public approach to demonstrate the benefits of better turf management. We're considering using the Common as a testing ground for environmentally managed lawn-care practices. We would have the DPW divide the Common into two parts with conventional lawn care used on one half and a program of environmentally sound turf management used on the other. Generally the use of IPM and other beneficial environmental practices results in substantially reduced maintenance costs, but frequently an increase, at least at first, in the number of complaints about the lack of perfect landscaping. I remember one individual, in seeing my back yard, said it was pleasant, these days, to see such a nice meadow.

And so, there we have it. Nothing has been put into place. It's still only a gleam in the Board's collective eye, but such a program might give considerable visibility to a problem which turns our ponds green in the spring, and is known to harm many of our local species including, sometimes, human beings. Please give us your thoughts about this plan. If enough people contact us telling us you like the idea, we'll do some real thinking about just exactly what it would involve and begin to plan for its possible implementation. Contact us if you have any ideas.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health, which can be reached at 781-383-4116.

The many wonders of dune grass

NATURAL VIEW

JIM SHIPSKY

Dune grass not only protects the dune from wind erosion, but also enables the dune to withstand the intense pounding of winter storm waves.

I'm in love with the beach. In "The Outermost House", Henry Beston describes it this way: " . . . these sands might be the end or the beginning of a world. Age by age, the sea here gives battle to the land; age by age, the earth struggles for her own, calling to her defense her energies and her creations, bidding her plants steal down upon the beach, and holding the frontier sands in a net of grass and roots which the storms wash free."

Walking along South Shore beaches and dunes long ago aroused my curiosity about the beach ecosystem. My favorite source of seacoast lore is Ian McHarg's "Design With Nature." McHarg describes the zones that form naturally on a seacoast. The beach, between low and high tide lines, is a place of joy and magic. People can use the beach intensively without harming it. In McHarg's words, "So the beach is tolerant to all the happiest of uses — swimming and picnicking, the making of sandcastles, fishing and sunbathing."

Next inland is the primary dune, stabilized by American dune grass (Ammophila brevigulata). This amazing plant is responsible for creating the primary dune. If you think about it, wind-blown sand consists of tiny rocks suspended in air, an unstable condition if ever there was one. At average wind speeds all it takes is a slight disturbance to the airflow, for example the stem and leaves of dune grass, and the sand particle falls to the ground. Burial by sand stimulates the growth of dune grass; it can cope with being buried in up to three feet of sand per year.

Dune grass is adapted to other harsh conditions — strong winds, high salinity, lack of moisture, and lack of nutrients. Its root system may descend to a depth of 10 feet or more, enabling it to reach adequate nutrients and water. Underground runners spread horizontally, growing up to five feet annually. The runner sends up shoots every foot or so. This extensive root system anchors and stabilizes the dune, enabling other plant species, such as beach pea, dusty miller, and beach rose to become established. This super-plant can even absorb silica from the sand and use it in the structure of its leaves. This makes the leaves very strong, able to withstand sand-blasting. All the while absorbing carbon dioxide from the atmosphere and generating oxygen! Thank you dune grass, for the air I breathe.

Dune grass not only protects the dune from wind erosion, but also enables the dune to withstand the intense pounding of winter storm waves. McHarg explains how dunes are capable of absorbing the furious energy of storm waves — by giving a bit, moving a little with each impact.

However, one thing dune grass cannot survive is trampling. People walking across dune grass easily kill it. McHarg tells the fascinating story of how the Netherlands is protected from storms and flooding by natural sand dunes that are stabilized by dune grass, and describes how vulnerable dune grass is to trampling. "In the Netherlands this information is the stuff of kindergarten classes. The vulnerability of dune grass is so well understood that dunes are denied to public access; only licensed naturalists are permitted to walk on them."

Cohasset could have beautiful natural sand dunes flourishing at Sandy Beach, along the ocean side of the parking lot, and along both sides of Atlantic Avenue. All it would take is the realization that sand dunes are beautiful and valuable, and respect for dune grass and other dune plants. We will be rewarded by the graceful flow of sand and dune grass, cool green in the summer and golden in the fall. And remember: Please don't walk on the dune grass.

Working for the Globe

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I think if I were starting out in this business, I would avoid working for the Boston Globe.

Oh, the pay is good. Even the lowliest reporter can make $50,000 a year, I am told. The choicest assignments go to Globies who are likely to turn up anywhere in the world. Expense accounts are rarely questioned. Beacon Hill snaps to attention when the Globe comes aboard.

Then why do I have feeling that the newsroom is bugged? Or that the appearances of staff members on TV and radio is monitored? Or that the Globe's compliance squad may show up at my next party to see if the balance of African-Americans, women, and Latinos is correct?

Even the stars are not immune as Bob Ryan, the sports columnist, found out the other day when he was suspended without pay for telling a TV audience that he would like to "smack" Joumana Kidd, a threat that had already been carried out by her basketball player husband, Jason Kidd.

One need not have a long memory to recall the time that David Nyhan, one of the stars of the Globe's op ed page, was fined $1,200 (later rescinded, I believe) for a scatological description of a coworker's relationship to women which was spoken, not written.

"Bob Ryan's comments were a clear and egregious violation of the standards of the Boston Globe," said editor Martin Baron. "Bob has been told in no uncertain terms that his remarks were offensive and unacceptable."

Even before the twin blights of diversity and political correctness set in, the Globe has been a curious specimen.

Even before the twin blights of diversity and political correctness set in, the Globe has been a curious specimen.

When I joined the Associated Press bureau in Boston in 1952, it was on the third floor of the Globe building across Washington Street, an area known as "Newspaper Row," and the crews of both papers drank together at Tommy McFarland's tavern downstairs.

Tommy's real name was Bevilacqua, meaning "drink water" in Italian, which I thought was a funny name for the dispenser of adult beverages.

But I digress . . .

Every night that the Bruins played out of town, a man from Western Union used to come into the AP office, receive a message via his clicker, leave one copy on the desk, and take another with him. The office copy lay there for a couple of days, then someone threw it away.

I asked the Western Union man why he was doing this. He didn't know, except that his boss told him to.

I asked the bureau chief. He didn't know, either, except that it had always been done to his knowledge.

Finally it was discovered that at some time in the early '30s, the Globe had ordered an addition to the wire story for itself.

Sometime during the war, the Globe apparently had forgotten about it. For 10 years or more, the paper had been paying for the add and not picking it up.

But I digress again . . .

It's no secret that Bob likes to talk; Basketball wits used to say that Tom Heinsohn liked to shoot so much that he once got off three shots while they were playing the national anthem. You could say the same for Ryan, substituting words for shots.

Only once do I recall seeing Bob speechless.

We knew each other on the level of acquaintance. Right now, he probably wouldn't know me from Marshall Hawkins; but this one night, after a Celtics game, we happened to be sitting at a table in The Horse when Celtic Paul Westphal and his wife, Cindy, joined us.

Cindy is best described as an 11 on a scale of one to 10. In order to sit down at the table, Cindy had to take off her coat.

Like I say, only once do I recall seeing Bob Ryan speechless.

Harbormaster won't be forgotten

TO THE EDITOR:

Our town had one of its luckiest moments the day John "Moose" Winters accepted the harbormaster job. I had the opportunity to work closely with John on a number of projects involving the sailing club. John loved to see the kids at the club develop an attachment for the water. He kept a watchful eye for their safety. If one of the club boats broke down John or his assistant would quietly appear to offer backup to our own safety boats.

Moose possessed great knowledge about boat mechanics and the waterfront. But his greatest skill lay in his ability to lead. Not once did John officiously use his badge to exercise authority. Rather he gently guided people to a conclusion best reflecting the interests of the harbor.

John advocated for the fishermen, for the boat owners and for the local clubs. When the groups came into conflict, he crafted solutions that kept the peace and moved everyone forward. This skill came easily to John because he tremendously valued fairness, enjoyed people, and felt passionate about the harbor.

John's legacy will live long after his death through the talented people he hired and trained. Thank you, John, for your extraordinary contributions and friendship.

Peace Forum is off the mark

TO THE EDITOR:

If you haven't been paying attention lately to foreign affairs, you might agree with last week's marvelously well-written letter from the peace vigil people. However, note that the appeasement and coddling of the bad guys by the UN, by previous administrations, and by various European countries with commercial interests at stake, have failed miserably. The "new" foreign policy recommended by the writers is but a return to the practices that have yielded nothing but grief.

On the other hand, the Bush policy of preemptive engagement has at last resulted in progress toward resolving the Palestinian dilemma, has significantly eroded the capability of the Al Qaeda terrorist organization,, has moved Syria to reign in terrorists, and has alerted Saudi Arabia that its support of terrorism will have consequences. The Bush activism may have stirred up some Muslim activists, but clearly it has also had positive influence on the governments that have sponsored or condoned terrorism. Many years ago, the frigate Constitution ended the tributes to the Barbary pirates and their sponsoring governments, with preemptive action. There are many other instances in world history where supine diplomacy failed but action successfully put the bad guys out of business. (Opponents of a strong military should review the history of Ethelred the Unready in medieval England. See also a fine book "The Savage Wars of Peace" by Max Boot).

Sure, "being opposed to bullying other nations with impunity" has a nice moral ring to it, but in the nasty real world the bad guys are interested in negotiation and diplomacy only as a means to hoodwink the naifs who cringe at the use of force. Like the proverbial mule, first you get its attention and respect with a bang on the head with a two-by-four. Peace vigils in the camp of the good guys may not do much harm to our resolve to face up to evil, but neither do they influence the real disturbers of the peace. The good and well-meaning peace vigil people could better direct their energies to persuading the UN to drop its sanctions that perpetuate the misery of the Iraqis, rather than futile attempts to hobble action to curb governments that are dangerous, savage and undemocratic.

Admittedly, the planning for the peace in Iraq was inadequate, and both our troops and the Iraqis will suffer for it. Nevertheless, the elimination of the Saddam regime is a significant milestone on the painful journey of countering terrorism.. No amount of peace protests will produce such a useful milestone, nor will a return to an ineffective foreign policy.

It's not enough merely to profess support for our troops, we should understand the situation well enough to realize that the miseries of war can be the price of preventing far greater miseries. Finally, the Gulf wars were not about preserving our oil supply, they are about denying to dangerous regimes the vast revenues from oil sales; dangerous regimes who would continue to use the revenues not only to purchase every conceivable weapon but also to subvert the free nations through terrorism. Continued denial will require vigorous and preemptive action. Peace vigils will have no effect on these undemocratic regimes. Let us hope that in time such regimes will be replaced by democratic governments tolerant of peace vigils and other diversity of opinion.

Coyote column is badly needed

TO THE EDITOR:

In the past two weeks, our family has sadly lost our two cats; Pumpkin who was 12 and Baby who was only a year and a half. We were very responsible with them and did not let them out at night. We are aware that there are numerous coyotes in town however, both cats accidentally snuck outside at night.

It is unsettling to us that they just "disappeared". We have posted signs, checked with shelters, and the police however, they have not returned. Although we live on Sohier Street, "downtown" Cohasset — I suspect coyotes were responsible. Also, in talking with people in town we discovered that we are not alone and many pets are also recently unaccounted for throughout our town.

I am writing to request a publishing of a few reports by the Animal Control Officer of Cohasset in the Mariner:

- A weekly missing animal report. This report would serve a twofold; it would allow identification and return of lost animals to their owners and it would serve to alert the public where the potential Coyote "feeding spots" are.
- A weekly definitive coyote sighting report that you have done in years past. How many are there and where do they live?
- A pet alert guide to raise awareness to pet owners and clarify your procedures for missing animals. This report would include such useful facts as:

Awareness Issues

〈 Do not leave trash or pet food outside
- Do not let your pets outside at night
〈 Some coyote behavioral facts (i.e. Now is den time which equals more feeding = high alert)

Your procedures

〈 What should residents do if they lose a pet? Who should it be reported to?

〈 If a resident loses a pet and you find it, what does the animal control officer do with it if it has no tags (i.e. Cat)?

We have lived in Cohasset for seven years and our cats went outside at night up until three or four years ago. It appears that the number that the number of coyotes have increased over the years and are causing many people losses of their dogs and cats. I realize that coyotes are an endangered species however, more information from you could help save a few more pets and prevent other's family anguish. My children are heart-broken and so are we.

CEA thanks volunteers

TO THE EDITOR:

The month of May is Older Americans Month, and the Cohasset Elder Affairs staff want to take this opportunity to thank individuals and groups in our community for their help in planning, preparing, serving, entertaining and cleaning up in connection with so many of our events. In particular, we note the February St. Valentine's Day tea, and in March the St. Patrick's Day Luncheon. These events were well received and afforded opportunities for friends to be together and visit in an atmosphere of fun and celebration.

There are so many people to thank for contributing their time and energies and to name just a few: the members of the Cohasset Elder Affairs Board, Anna Abbruzzese and the Gourmet Club members, the Rev. Ritts and the Second Congregational Church members, the Rev. Mulvehill and St. Anthony Church members, and the Rev. Cutler and St. Stephen Church members for Meals on Wheels delivery. We thank the many individuals who drive our van, who shop, prepare food, set tables and clean up after our lunches and events.

How fortunate we are in this community to have such a sense of commitment and support from so many of our friends. We could not accomplish all that we do without them.

During the month of May, we held a Tea at The Friends Home in Hingham May 8; and look forward to the Birthday Party for our Octogenarian and Nonagenarian Friends May 15; and the Plymouth North Culinary Department Lunch May 20. A number of our seniors will be taking part in the Read Aloud Day at the Osgood School May 23. This was a successful event last year, and the participants look forward to continuing it this year. On May 28, our veterans are invited to attend a Memorial Day Brunch at the Cohasset Senior Center, 3 North Main St. The brunch is held in conjunction with our TRIAD program, and the chiefs from our Police and Fire Departments are present to share appropriate information with those in attendance. Lastly, May 29, we are offering a Legal Clinic to all who are interested. (Details on the foregoing programs are available at Cohasset Elder Affairs, 781-383-9112).

On May 1 in recognition of May Day, the Osgood School third-grade class made lovely May baskets for the seniors who attended our Thursday luncheon, and the nursery school children entertained the group by singing songs. We thank Sheila O'Neil and her staff for this delightful program.

We are always heartened at CEA for the wonderful spirit of community, for the intergenerational programs, and for our volunteers who so willingly give of their time. We honor our older Americans during May and all through the year for their unique contributions that have made our community and our world a better place.

Flower girls needed

The American Legion auxiliary is looking for flower girls to join the Memorial Day Parade at the common at 11:30 a.m.; walk to the harbor and throw flowers during the ceremony. Flowers will be provided and adults will escort the girls. Contact Brenda Douglas at 383-9144 or Jill Cronin at 545-2354.

Bypass pipe installed

The Water Dept. is starting to install bypass May 14 on the Hillside as it prepares to replace undersized water mains starting about May 19 on Bancroft Road, Hill Street, Norfolk Road, and Oak Street.

The Water Dept. will start flushing the entire distribution system during the week of May 19. Residents will get more specific notification before flushing begins in their area so they can take appropriate precautions.

Romney-Finneran feud is a lot more than arithmetic

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The fight's really on now between Romney and the Democrats, and it's a fight about 2004, on several levels.

• The argument about budget numbers for next year.

In the media we like to write about the personality clashes and power struggles. But real people are way more affected by the arithmetic frantically rearranged in a side room off the House chamber all week long, as representatives grappled to pass a state budget and solve a $3 billion budget deficit. The numbers aren't being changed much, to the chagrin of groups like the Massachusetts Municipal Association and the Council of Human Service Providers. Among the torrent of significant — and overlooked decisions taken were amendments limiting state borrowing for long-term projects to $800 million a year, instead of $1.2 billion, and expanding the number of mothers who must work if they want to keep receiving welfare. Before voting 128-29 to adopt a $22.5 billion fiscal 2004 budget bill, the House attempted to salvage the popular Prescription Drug insurance program. Senators indicated they may follow suit. The program serves 80,000 people.

• The struggle between Mitt Romney and Thomas Finneran, both eyeing the next election cycle.

Its escalation is increasing the momentum behind a developing showdown between the men and their parties in 2004. The governor hit the campaign trail for a Republican running in a special election for a Braintree-based House seat. And Romney is talking about running candidates against Finneran's rank and file in the elections next year – candidates that must be recruited early, i.e. now, if the Republicans are going to assemble a genuine threat to the status quo in Finneran's House. The dispute grew for a few months and then burst into ugliness when Romney criticized Finneran's economic proposal three weeks ago. Finneran hates, hates that kind of dis, and he doesn't forget it – ask some of the representatives who are still bearing the wounds of diminished stature from their long-ago decisions to question his chosen path. And Finneran loves to protect House Democrats from politically tough votes – last week he blocked votes on budget amendments that would have made it look like his members were against increasing local aid. Finneran thinks of the House as his family. He teared up at the end of the debate, publicly wishing the son he never had would have been like House budget chief John Rogers.

Among the manifestations of the feud were the governor's criticism of the proposed stricter borrowing cap, the continuing Battle of the Bulger and a dispute over the naming of the main section of the Big Dig. After Finneran blocked a vote on the issue, Romney insisted he won't stop trying to eliminating the $14 million UMass President's office headed up by William Bulger. The GOP is trying to portray the office as a misuse of taxpayer resources. No one in the GOP is jumping up and down to name the Dig after the late great "Tip" O'Neill, a Democratic icon, and so Romney and Finneran's allies continued sparring in the newspapers over whether the tunnel should be called the Liberty Tunnel. If the usual pattern holds, and present trends continue, the Big Dig will wind up named the Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill Verizon Liberty Tunnel.

On the high road, the Democrats will continue playing the economy card against Romney; on the low road, Finneran recently issued a letter of attack against the governor so insulting the speaker was moved to apologize for it on WRKO. The apology could lower the temperature and volume, but dynamics are now in place resembling the long reciprocal grudge the speaker had with former Senate President Birmingham. Finneran would from time to time say pleasant things about Birmingham, too, but no one in the building doubted his true feelings.

• Romney needs long-term public support, because Finneran and Senate President Travaglini have the votes in the State House, and the governor doesn't.

It's the most important reality of all. As has been the case for so many years, Republican governors can propose whatever they want, and if the Democrats don't like the idea, it's dead. The debates are within the party, and between the House and Senate. Republican governors have been promising for more than a decade to change this ultimate political bottom line, but have found even multi-billion dollar budget problems easier to resolve than the mathematics of power.

It was the kind of week where one could say, what news wasn't about the budget process? The answer: plenty.

• State could be heading for cape-to-berkshire smoking ban — The same week Boston adopted a ban on smoking in all bars and restaurants, the Health Care Committee heard broad support for bills that would outlaw smoking in all workplaces in the Commonwealth. Witnesses said a waitress working a full shift can inhale the equivalent of a half pack of cigarettes.

• Stanley wins better government award — When Rep. Harriett Stanley was removed as chairwoman of the Health Care Committee, the suggestion was made by the speaker's office that she hadn't shown enough acumen on health care policy. The Pioneer Institute would beg to differ: it gave Stanley $3,000 as an award for her plan to re-engineer the Medicaid program. The plan was one of four winners in this year's Better Government Competition.

• Domestic violence panel revised, expanded — Lt. Gov. Healey will chair the expanded version of the state Domestic Violence Commission, renamed the Governor's Commission on Sexual and Domestic Violence. At the press conference announcing its reconstitution (membership was not detailed), organizers said the church scandal of the past year and other crimes have lent new urgency to the issue.

• The week in budget history — There's no way to deliver a summary of the budget action at a glance, but here's last week's activity at as few glances as possible. All would need Senate approval to go to the governor, and he could veto any of them.

— Funding for programs for the disabled was increased $1.7 million.

— A "cybershame" Internet roster of tax scofflaws was approved.

— Special needs students were exempted from the MCAS graduation requirement, a vote Education Commissioner David Driscoll called insulting to the 70 percent of special needs kids who worked to pass the exam.

— Various state agencies were barred from using Social Security numbers on employee ID cards, in a bid to prevent identity theft.

— Charter school funding would be studied under an amendment, but a moratorium on new charters was rejected.

— A study of the desirable but very expensive North-South Station rail link was approved.

— Another study would identify how state colleges can respond to the training needs of businesses in their region, a plan some criticized as a kind of advanced vocation ed.

—Still another study would determine whether the $30 an hour rate for public defenders should be raised.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

By Bob Katzen

May 5-9, 2003

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.
THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local senators' votes on one roll call and local representatives' votes on seven roll calls from the week of May 5-9. All House roll calls are on amendments to the proposed $22.5 billion fiscal 2004 state budget.

RULES FOR SENATE BUDGET DEBATE

Senate 38-2, approved a set of rules to be followed when the Senate considers the fiscal 2004 state budget. A key provision requires that any member who proposes an increase in spending in excess of $100,000 also offer a proposal decreasing spending by an equal or greater amount. Another provision prohibits any amendment that increases taxes or other revenues from earmarking the revenue for specific programs. Supporters said these new rules would impose fiscal responsibility in light of the state's huge deficit by preventing members from offering new spending without making corresponding cuts. Opponents said the new rules give more power to the Senate leadership by allowing it to propose a budget without the "increase/decrease" restriction placed on members who offer amendments to it. They said the new rules are anti-democratic and will further decrease the input and power of individual members. (A "Yea" vote is for the new rules. A "Nay" vote is against the new rules).
